

72nd BPSC PRELIMS

प्रहार

Test Series

Test- 11

Modern History 01

Solution

English

Khan Global Studies

Most Trusted Learning Platform

BPSC TEST-11 (SOLUTION)

Q 1. Ans. D

Explanation:

- The historian whose paradigm is criticised by Sumit Sarkar as a “simplistic version of the Marxian class approach” is Rajni Palme Dutt.
- The foundation of Marxist historiography regarding the Indian national movement was primarily laid by two classic works: Rajni Palme Dutt’s India Today (published in England in 1940 and India in 1947) and A.R. Desai’s Social Background of Indian Nationalism (1948).

Q 2. Ans. C

Explanation:

- The Subaltern Approach to Indian history focuses on the experiences, struggles, and contributions of ordinary people such as peasants, tribal communities, workers, women, and other marginalised sections of society rather than kings, political leaders, or elite groups. The term “subaltern” refers to groups that remained socially, politically, and economically oppressed or excluded from mainstream power structures. The term was originally borrowed from Antonio Gramsci’s Prison Notebooks.
- This approach was founded by Ranajit Guha, who constituted the Subaltern Studies Group in 1979–80 at the University of Sussex, England, with the first volume of Subaltern Studies published in 1982.”

Q 3. Ans. C

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The Dutch East India Company, also known as the VOC (Vereenigde Oostindische Compagnie), entered India in the early 17th century. Their first trading factory in India was established at Masulipatnam on the Coromandel Coast of present-day Andhra Pradesh. From there, the Dutch expanded their trade network to places such as Pulicat, Surat, Nagapattinam, and Cochin.
- Statement 2 is incorrect: The French East India Company was established in 1664 during the reign of King Louis XIV under the guidance of his finance minister Jean-Baptiste Colbert. Unlike the English East India Company, which enjoyed considerable autonomy as a private joint-stock company, the French Company was heavily controlled and supported by the French monarchy.

- Statement 3 is correct: The English East India Company received a royal charter from Queen Elizabeth I in 1600. Elizabeth I granted a royal charter to the English East India Company. This charter gave the company exclusive rights to trade with the East Indies for 15 years. The company later established trading centres at Surat, Madras, Bombay, and Calcutta, gradually transforming from a commercial body into a political power in India.

Q 4. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Francisco de Almeida was appointed as the first Portuguese Governor in India in 1505 by King Manuel I of Portugal. He introduced the policy known as the “Blue Water Policy”, which aimed to establish Portuguese dominance over the Indian Ocean through naval supremacy rather than large territorial expansion. His most decisive achievement was the Battle of Diu (1509), in which he defeated a combined Egyptian-Gujarati fleet and firmly established Portuguese naval supremacy in the Indian Ocean.
- Others
  - ✓ Vasco da Gama was the first Portuguese explorer to reach India in 1498 at Calicut
  - ✓ Nuno da Cunha (often written as Nino da Cunha in older texts) served later as a Portuguese governor and strengthened Portuguese settlements, especially around Gujarat and Daman.
  - ✓ Afonso de Albuquerque succeeded Almeida and is considered the real founder of Portuguese political power in India. He captured Goa in 1510 and made it the Portuguese capital in India.

Q 5. Ans. C

Explanation:

- The Permanent Settlement was introduced in Bengal by Lord Cornwallis in 1793. It was a land revenue system implemented by the British East India Company mainly in Bengal, Bihar, and parts of Odisha.
- Under this system:
  - ✓ The zamindars were recognised as the permanent owners of land.
  - ✓ They were required to pay a fixed amount of revenue to the British government.

- ✓ The revenue demand was fixed permanently, meaning it would not increase in the future.
- ✓ The revenue was split in the ratio of 10:1 which meant, 10/11 went to the British government and only 1/11 was retained by the Zamindar.
- ✓ A critical provision was the Sunset Clause: if a Zamindar failed to deposit revenue by the stipulated date (sunset), his land would be auctioned off to recover dues.
- ✓ The system was preceded by a Decennial (10-year) Settlement in 1790; it was made permanent in 1793.
- ✓ Lord Cornwallis modelled this on the English landlord system, envisaging zamindars as a loyal class of landed gentry who would invest in improving agriculture.

Q 6. Ans. C

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The Battle of Buxar was fought in 1764 between the British East India Company and a combined alliance of:
  - ✓ Mir Qasim, the former Nawab of Bengal,
  - ✓ Shuja-ud-Daula (Nawab of Awadh), and
  - ✓ Shah Alam II (Mughal Emperor).
  - ✓ The British forces were commanded by Major Hector Munro.
- Statement 2 is correct: After the British victory in the Battle of Buxar, Robert Clive signed the Treaty of Allahabad in 1765 with Shah Alam II. Robert Clive actually signed two separate treaties at Allahabad — one with Shah Alam II and a second with Shuja-ud-Daula of Awadh.
- Under this treaty:
  - ✓ The Mughal Emperor granted the Diwani rights (the right to collect revenue) of Bengal, Bihar, and Orissa to the British East India Company.
  - ✓ In exchange, the Company agreed to pay Shah Alam II an annual tribute of ₹26 lakh. “Shuja-ud-Daula paid a war indemnity of ₹50 lakh, ceded Allahabad and Kara, and Awadh was preserved as a buffer state.”
  - ✓ This gave the Company enormous financial resources and marked the beginning of British political and economic dominance in India. This led directly to Clive’s Dual Government System (1765) — the Company held Diwani (revenue) while the Nawab retained Nizamat (civil administration). This system was later abolished by Warren Hastings in 1772.

Q 7. Ans. D

Explanation:

- Battle of Plassey — 1757
  - ✓ This battle was fought between the forces of Siraj ud-Daulah and the British East India Company, led by Robert Clive. The British victory marked the beginning of British political control in India.
- Battle of Buxar — 1764
  - ✓ This battle was fought between the British and the combined forces of Mir Qasim, Shuja-ud-Daula, and Shah Alam II. The British victory strengthened their control over Bengal and led to the grant of Diwani rights.
- Third Battle of Panipat — 1761
  - ✓ This famous battle was fought between the Marathas and the invading forces of Ahmad Shah Durrani (Abdali). The Maratha commanders Viswasrao and Bhausaheb were killed in the battle.
- Fourth Anglo-Mysore War — 1799
  - ✓ This war was fought between the British and the Kingdom of Mysore, ruled by Tipu Sultan. Tipu Sultan was killed during the siege of Seringapatam, and Mysore was partitioned — the British restored the Hindu Wadiyar dynasty as a subsidiary ally under the Subsidiary Alliance system, while retaining direct control over large portions of Mysore’s territory.

Q 8. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is incorrect: The orthodox Marxist approach (represented most famously by Rajni Palme Dutt in India Today) did not view the national movement primarily as a structured mass struggle. Instead, they viewed it as a highly structured bourgeois movement. While they acknowledged that the masses (peasants and workers) participated, Marxist historians argued that the bourgeois leadership (the Indian National Congress) constantly feared the masses.
- Statement 2 is correct: Central to the Marxist paradigm is its view of the Indian National Congress as a party representing the interests of the Indian capitalist and landowning classes (the bourgeoisie). Marxists argued that this elite class used the mass movement as a pressure tactic to extract concessions from the British.

Q 9. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is incorrect: The immediate trigger of the 1857 Rebellion was the introduction of the Enfield rifle, whose cartridges were allegedly greased with cow and pig fat, hurting the religious sentiments of both Hindu and Muslim sepoys.
- The rebellion had several deeper causes, including:
  - ✓ Political causes such as annexation policies,
  - ✓ Economic exploitation by the British,
  - ✓ Social and religious interference,
  - ✓ Discontent among sepoys due to discrimination and poor service conditions.
- Statement 2 is correct: The Doctrine of Lapse was introduced by Lord Dalhousie. According to this policy, if an Indian ruler died without a natural male heir, his kingdom could be annexed by the British East India Company.
- States such as Satara (1848), Jaitpur and Sambalpur (1849), Baghat (1850), Chota Udaipur (1852), Jhansi (1853), and Nagpur (1854) were annexed under this policy. Awadh (1856) was also annexed, though under the pretext of misrule rather than absence of heir, and its annexation is considered the most explosive trigger of the 1857 Revolt. This created widespread anger among Indian princes and ruling families. Rani Lakshmibai became one of the leading figures of the revolt partly because Jhansi had been annexed under this policy. Similarly, Nana Sahib, adopted son of the last Peshwa Baji Rao II, was denied his foster father's pension under this doctrine, making him one of the revolt's leading figures.

Q 10. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: Haidar Ali was one of the strongest opponents of British expansion in South India. During the Second Anglo-Mysore War, he fought effectively against the British, but Haidar Ali died of cancer on December 7, 1782 — not in battle. After his death, Tipu Sultan continued the struggle and forced the British to sign the Treaty of Mangalore (1784), which restored the status quo — making it the last treaty signed between an Indian power and the British on equal terms
- Statement 2 is incorrect: The Third Anglo-Mysore War ended in defeat for Tipu Sultan. The British, led by Lord Cornwallis, allied with the Marathas and the Nizam of Hyderabad against Mysore.

- The war concluded with the Treaty of Seringapatam (1792), under which Tipu Sultan:
  - ✓ surrendered nearly half of his territory,
  - ✓ paid a war indemnity of ₹3 crore (half payable immediately)
  - ✓ and gave two of his sons as hostages to the British temporarily.
- Statement 3 is correct: The Fourth Anglo-Mysore War was initiated by Governor-General Lord Wellesley, who feared Tipu's alliance with Napoleonic France.
- The Fourth Anglo-Mysore War ended in 1799 with the British capture of Seringapatam. Tipu Sultan was killed during the battle.
- After his death:
  - ✓ The British took control over large parts of Mysore,
  - ✓ The Wodeyar dynasty was restored but was made to sign a Subsidiary Alliance, converting Mysore into a complete dependency of the East India Company.
- This marked the end of Mysore as a major independent power in South India.

Q 11. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Assertion (A) is true: The Carnatic Wars were a series of three wars fought between the English and the French in South India during the 18th century. These wars were closely linked to the rivalry between Britain and France in Europe.
- In the end, the English East India Company emerged victorious over the French East India Company. The decisive turning point came after the Third Carnatic War, which ended with the Treaty of Paris (1763). Although the French were allowed to retain a few trading centres like Pondicherry, they lost their political influence in India, while the British became the dominant European power.
- Reason (R) is true: The British had several important advantages:
  - ✓ Naval Superiority: Britain possessed a much stronger navy, which allowed it to control sea routes, send reinforcements, and maintain regular supplies to India. The French navy was comparatively weaker and less consistent.
  - ✓ Financial Strength: The English East India Company functioned as a powerful private commercial enterprise with strong support from British merchants and investors. It generated large profits through trade and could finance military campaigns effectively.

- ✓ Loss of Dupleix: A critical blow to French ambitions was the recall of Joseph François Dupleix in 1754 by the French government. Dupleix was the principal architect of French political and military strategy in India. His removal at a decisive moment deprived the French of their most capable leader and effectively ended any serious French bid for Indian dominance.
- The French Company depended more heavily on the French government, which often faced financial difficulties and political instability in Europe.

Q 12. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Colonial Approach
  - ✓ The Colonial Approach was developed mainly by British historians and administrators. It portrayed Indian society as backward, divided, and incapable of self-rule. According to this interpretation, British rule was presented as a “civilising mission” that brought modern education, law, and administration to India.
- Nationalist Approach
  - ✓ The Nationalist Approach emerged as a response to colonial writings. Nationalist historians highlighted the achievements of India’s ancient civilisation, cultural unity, and glorious past in order to inspire nationalism and strengthen the anti-colonial movement.
  - ✓ Key historians include R.C. Majumdar, Tara Chand, and early Congress leaders who used historical writing as a tool of political mobilisation.
- Marxist Approach
  - ✓ The Marxist Approach interprets history mainly through economic conditions and class struggle. Marxist historians study how capitalism, imperialism, and exploitation shaped Indian society and politics, especially under British colonial rule.
- Subaltern Approach
  - ✓ The Subaltern Approach focuses on ordinary people such as peasants, workers, tribal communities, and marginalised groups. It argues that traditional history ignored the independent role played by these groups in shaping historical events.

- ✓ The term ‘subaltern’ was borrowed from Antonio Gramsci’s Prison Notebooks. The Subaltern Studies Collective was founded by Ranajit Guha in 1979–80, with its first volume published in 1982. Unlike the Marxist school, subalternists argue that Indian society cannot be explained through class alone — they emphasise caste, gender, and religion as equally important axes of oppression.

Q 13. Ans. D

Explanation:

- Lord William Bentinck abolished the practice of Sati in 1829 through Regulation XVII. He was strongly supported by social reformers like Raja Ram Mohan Roy, who campaigned against this inhuman custom.
- Lord Dalhousie, often called the ‘Maker of Modern India’, strongly promoted railways through his famous Railway Minute (1853), which laid out a systematic plan for a railway network across India. During his tenure, the first railway line in India was started in 1853 between Bombay and Thane. He strongly promoted modern transport and communication systems such as railways, telegraph, and postal reforms.
- The Vernacular Press Act was passed in 1878 during the tenure of Lord Lytton. The Act aimed to suppress criticism of British policies in Indian-language newspapers. It was widely opposed by Indian nationalists because it restricted freedom of the press. Critically, the Act applied only to Indian-language (vernacular) newspapers — English-language papers were fully exempt, which revealed its discriminatory intent. In a famous act of defiance, Amrita Bazar Patrika converted overnight from a Bengali to an English newspaper to escape the Act’s reach. The Act was subsequently repealed by Lord Ripon in 1882.

Q 14. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Sir Thomas Roe was sent by James I to the court of Jahangir in 1615 as the official ambassador of the English East India Company.
- The main objective was to obtain trading privileges for the English in India. Through careful diplomacy and negotiations at Jahangir’s court, Sir Thomas Roe successfully secured a firman (royal order) from the Mughal Emperor. This permission allowed the English East India Company to establish trading factories at places including Surat and helped the Company strengthen its commercial activities in India.

Q 15. Ans. C

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The Cartaz system was introduced by the Portuguese after they established their naval dominance in the Indian Ocean from 1502 onwards, when Vasco da Gama's forces first established dominance on the Malabar Coast. A Cartaz was basically a naval pass or trade license issued to merchant ships.
- Under this system:
  - ✓ Ships sailing in the Indian Ocean had to obtain a Portuguese permit
  - ✓ The pass mentioned details such as the ship's route, cargo, and destination
  - ✓ Ships without a Cartaz could be automatically confiscated; their crew were killed or sent to the galleys as punishment.
- Statement 2 is correct: The Portuguese naval power in the Indian Ocean became so strong that even major Indian rulers and merchants were often compelled to obtain Cartaz passes for safe movement of their ships.
- At times, Even the Mughal Empire was systematically subjected to this system. Gulbadan Begam, paternal aunt of Akbar, had to wait one full year in Surat for a Portuguese cartaz before she could sail for Hajj. Most dramatically, in 1613, the Portuguese seized the Rahimi — the imperial pilgrim ship owned by Mariam-uz-Zamani (Jahangir's mother) — even though it possessed a valid cartaz, carrying off 700 pilgrims and cargo worth 1 lakh pounds. This outraged Emperor Jahangir, who ordered the siege of Daman and closure of Jesuit churches in retaliation.
- The Cartaz system symbolised Portuguese attempts to dominate the Indian Ocean trade through naval supremacy rather than large territorial control.

Q 16. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The Battle of Plassey was fought on 23 June 1757 between the forces of Siraj ud-Daulah and the British East India Company led by Robert Clive.
- The main reason for the British victory was the betrayal by Mir Jafar, who was the commander-in-chief of Siraj-ud-Daulah's army. Mir Jafar secretly entered into an agreement with the British and did not effectively participate in the battle. The conspiracy involved not just Mir Jafar but also Jagat Seth (the powerful banker), Rai Durlabh, and Manik Chand. Omi Chand, who threatened to reveal the plot, was neutralised by Robert Clive through a fake treaty — one of the most notorious acts of deception in the Company's history. As a result, Siraj-ud-Daulah was defeated, and Mir Jafar was later made the Nawab of Bengal by the British. Siraj-ud-Daulah fled but was captured and assassinated on the orders of Mir Miran (Mir Jafar's son). In return for the Company's support, Mir Jafar paid an indemnity of ₹1.75 crore and granted the 24 Parganas to the British East India Company.

- Statement 2 is incorrect: The Battle of Plassey gave the British enormous political influence in Bengal, but the Diwani rights were not obtained immediately after this battle.
  - ✓ The Diwani rights of Bengal, Bihar, and Orissa were granted later in 1765 after the Battle of Buxar through the Treaty of Allahabad signed between Robert Clive and Shah Alam II.

Q 17. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The Doctrine of Lapse was introduced by Lord Dalhousie. According to this policy, if a ruler of a princely state died without a natural male heir, the British East India Company could refuse to recognise an adopted son as the successor and annex the state.
- Statement 2 is incorrect: Awadh was annexed by the British in 1856, but not under the Doctrine of Lapse. The British annexed Awadh on the ground of "misgovernment" or maladministration. Lord Dalhousie accused Nawab Wajid Ali Shah of poor governance and used that as justification for annexation.
- Statement 3 is correct: Satara became the first state annexed under the Doctrine of Lapse in 1848. Later, states like Jhansi, Nagpur, and Sambalpur were also annexed using the same policy.
- Statement 4 is incorrect: Under the Doctrine of Lapse, the adopted heir was denied the political right to rule the state, but generally the adopted heir could still inherit the private property and personal wealth of the deceased ruler. Therefore, the doctrine mainly affected political succession, not personal inheritance.

Q 18. Ans. C

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The Ryotwari System was mainly introduced in the Madras Presidency and later extended to the Bombay Presidency by the British East India Company during the 19th century.
  - ✓ The system was associated mainly with British administrators such as Thomas Munro and Alexander Read. The system was first experimentally applied in the Baramahal region of Madras Presidency in 1792 by Captain Alexander Read. It was also extended to the Bombay Presidency (1818), and to Assam and Coorg. It was implemented particularly in areas where the British believed that large zamindars were absent or less influential.
- Statement 2 is correct: Under the Ryotwari System:
  - ✓ The British government collected land revenue directly from the cultivators, known as ryots.
  - ✓ The ryot was recognised as the proprietor of the land as long as he paid the land revenue regularly.
  - ✓ No intermediaries like zamindars were involved between the government and the cultivator.
  - ✓ Revenue was fixed at 45–55% of net produce. Unlike the Permanent Settlement, the Ryotwari Settlement was periodically revised every 20–30 years. Ryots who failed to pay could be evicted from their land.

Q 19. Ans. A

Explanation:

The Regulating Act of 1773 was an important constitutional measure passed by the British Parliament to regulate the administration of the East India Company in India.

- Statement 1 is correct: The Regulating Act of 1773 was the first major attempt by the British Parliament to supervise and control the political and administrative activities of the East India Company in India. It marked the beginning of parliamentary control over the Company's affairs.
- Statement 2 is correct: The Act provided for the establishment of a Supreme Court at Calcutta in 1774. It was the first Supreme Court in India and consisted of:
  - ✓ One Chief Justice,
  - ✓ and three other judges.

- ✓ The first Chief Justice was Sir Elijah Impey, a close friend of Warren Hastings.

- The court was set up to administer justice according to British law.
- Statement 3 is correct: The Act elevated the position of the Governor of Bengal to Governor-General of Bengal. Warren Hastings became the first Governor-General under this Act. He was assisted by an Executive Council of four members to help in administration and decision-making. The four council members were Lt-Gen John Clavering, George Monson, Richard Barwell, and Philip Francis. Decisions were taken by majority vote — the Governor-General could vote only in case of a tie and had no veto power, which frequently led to administrative deadlock.
- The Act also made the Governors of Bombay and Madras presidencies subordinate to the Governor-General of Bengal, establishing centralised authority for the first time.
- Statement 4 is incorrect: The Regulating Act of 1773 did not end the Company's commercial monopoly. The monopoly continued for several more years.
- The monopoly over Indian trade was mainly ended later through the:
  - ✓ Charter Act of 1813 (ended monopoly over Indian trade except tea and trade with China),
  - ✓ and further reduced by the Charter Act of 1833.
  - ✓ The Act also prohibited Company servants from engaging in private trade or accepting gifts or bribes from Indian rulers — an anti-corruption measure.

Q 20. Ans. D

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: "Home Charges" were the biggest and most visible component of the Drain of Wealth. These were annual remittances sent from Indian revenues to London to pay for the British administration. They included the maintenance of the India Office in London, pensions and furlough salaries of British civil and military officials who had served in India, interest on the Indian public debt, and guaranteed interest to British investors who funded Indian railways.
- Statement 2 is correct: The primary mechanism of the drain was India's massive export surplus. In a normal economic relationship, if a country exports more than it imports, it receives the balance in bullion (gold/silver) or valuable goods. However, early nationalists pointed out that India's export surplus was entirely used by the British to pay off the "Home Charges." Therefore, a huge volume of Indian goods left the country, but brought back absolutely no reciprocal economic return, effectively bleeding the country's wealth.

- Statement 3 is correct: While Dadabhai Naoroji was the primary architect of the "Drain of Wealth" theory (famously detailed in his book Poverty and Un-British Rule in India), Romesh Chunder (R.C.) Dutt was its most formidable academic proponent. In his monumental two-volume work, The Economic History of India (published in the early 1900s), Dutt meticulously documented how British land revenue policies, the destruction of indigenous industries, and the continuous drain paralysed the Indian economy.
- Statement 4 is correct: Before the emergence of the economic critique, many Indians and British officials believed British rule was a modernising, benevolent force. The early nationalists (the Moderates) completely shattered this myth. By developing the Drain Theory, they successfully argued that India's abject, widespread poverty and frequent famines were not due to overpopulation or the weather, but were the direct, fundamental consequence of systematic British economic exploitation and the continuous draining away of Indian capital.

Q 21. Ans. C

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The Indian Association was founded in 1876 in Calcutta by Surendranath Banerjee and Ananda Mohan Bose. The first President of the Association was Rev. Krishna Mohan Banerjee, with Ananda Mohan Bose serving as Secretary. Surendranath Banerjee had earlier been associated with the precursor India League (1875) founded by Sisir Kumar Ghosh.
  - ✓ The organisation was established to bring politically conscious Indians together and to create a broader national political movement at a time when political activities were still limited to small regional groups.
- Statement 2 is correct: The Indian Association sought to:
  - ✓ unite Indians from different regions and communities,
  - ✓ create political awareness among the people,
  - ✓ develop a strong public opinion against unjust British policies,

- ✓ and promote political unity on common national issues.

It also worked for:

- The expansion of civil services opportunities for Indians,
- Protesting the British reduction of the ICS examination age limit from 21 to 19 years (1877), which disadvantaged Indian candidates who needed time to travel and prepare in England
- The Indian Association organised the first all-India political conference (December 28–30, 1883 in Calcutta), attended by over 100 delegates from across India — making it a forerunner of the Indian National Congress. It later merged with the INC in 1886.

Q 22. Ans. B

Explanation:

- The East India Association was founded in 1866 by Dadabhai Naoroji in London. Its objective was to present Indian grievances before the British public and Parliament and to promote better understanding between India and Britain.
- The Bombay Presidency Association was established in Bombay (Mumbai) in 1885 by leaders such as:
  - ✓ Pherozeshah Mehta,
  - ✓ K. T. Telang
  - ✓ and Badruddin Tyabji
  - ✓ Its formation was triggered by the reactionary policies of Lord Lytton and the Ilbert Bill controversy (1883), which stirred deep political resentment in Bombay.
- The Landholders' Society was founded in 1838 in Calcutta (Kolkata) by prominent zamindars of Bengal to protect the interests of landlords. It was one of the earliest political associations in India.
- In 1851, the Landholders' Society merged with the Bengal British India Society to form the British India Association, led by Radhakant Deb and Debendranath Tagore — which became a more significant political body."

Q 23. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Assertion (A) is true: The Ilbert Bill controversy became an important turning point in the growth of Indian nationalism. The controversy exposed the racial discrimination practised by the British in India and deeply influenced educated Indians.

- Reason (R) is true: This atmosphere later contributed to the establishment of the Indian National Congress in 1885.
- The Ilbert Bill was introduced during the tenure of Lord Ripon by law member Courtenay Ilbert. The Bill proposed that Indian judges should be allowed to try European offenders in criminal cases.
- The European community in India immediately launched organised opposition — forming the European and Anglo-Indian Defence Association and staging what historians call the ‘White Mutiny’ — holding mass protests across Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, running inflammatory press campaigns, and petitioning the British Parliament.
- This incident shocked educated Indians and demonstrated:
  - ✓ The racial arrogance of the British,
  - ✓ The effectiveness of organised political mobilisation.
- Indian leaders understood that only a united and organised movement could effectively defend Indian interests.

Q 24. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: the British Parliament passed the Government of India Act, 1858, which ended the rule of the East India Company in India. The Queen’s Proclamation formally declared that the administration of India would now be carried out directly by the British Crown.
- The Proclamation was read out by Lord Canning at a Grand Darbar at Allahabad on 1 November 1858 — on this occasion, Canning became India’s first Viceroy. The Proclamation is also known as the ‘Magna Carta of the People of India.’
- Statement 2 is correct: The proclamation assured Indian princes that:
  - ✓ Their territories and treaties would be respected
  - ✓ The British would not follow aggressive annexation policies
  - ✓ The rights, dignity, and honour of native rulers would be protected.
- Statement 3 is incorrect: The proclamation did not grant independence to annexed territories. India remained under British colonial rule. The British merely promised a more cautious and non-expansionist policy in the future.
- Other key provisions of the Proclamation: (a) Non-interference in religious matters of Indians;

(b) Equal protection under law for all subjects regardless of race or religion; (c) Indians to be eligible for government service based on merit; (d) Secretary of State for India (with a 15-member Council of India) created to oversee Indian affairs from London.”

Q 25. Ans. D

Explanation:

- Bangabhasha Prakasika Sabha
  - ✓ Founded in 1836, it is regarded as one of the earliest political organisations in Bengal. It discussed government policies and administrative reforms and represented the growing political awareness among educated Indians.
- Landholders’ Society
  - ✓ Founded in 1838 and also known as the Zamindari Association, it was established by influential zamindars of Bengal to safeguard their interests. It is considered one of the earliest organised political bodies in India.
- Bengal British India Society
  - ✓ Established in 1843, the Bengal British India Society aimed to collect and disseminate information regarding the actual condition of the people of India and promote reforms through constitutional means.
- British Indian Association
  - ✓ Founded in 1851, it resulted from the merger of the Landholders’ Society and the Bengal British India Society. It became one of the most influential political organisations before the rise of the Indian National Congress and submitted petitions demanding administrative reforms and greater Indian participation in governance.

Q 26. Ans. C

Explanation:

- The Indian Councils Act 1861 officially formalised the Portfolio System, which had already been informally introduced by Lord Canning in 1859
- Under this system:
  - ✓ Each member of the Viceroy’s Executive Council was assigned a separate department such as finance, military, law, home affairs, etc.
  - ✓ Under the expanded council, Lord Canning nominated the first three Indian members in 1862: the Raja of Banaras, the Maharaja of Patiala, and Sir Dinkar Rao.

- ✓ Each member became responsible for the administration of that particular department.
- This system functioned similarly to a modern cabinet form of government and improved administrative efficiency. The Act also restored legislative powers to Bombay and Madras presidencies and provided for the creation of new legislative councils in Bengal (1862), NWFP (1866), and Punjab (1897) — marking a shift towards legislative decentralisation.
- The Act also granted the Viceroy the power to issue ordinances for up to 6 months during emergencies, without requiring legislative council approval.

Q 27. Ans. B

Explanation:

- The Treaty of Yandabo was signed in 1826 and concluded the First Anglo-Burmese War. The war was fought between the British East India Company and the Burmese kingdom due to conflicts over territorial expansion in northeast India and border regions such as Assam, Manipur, and Arakan.
- Under the Treaty of Yandabo:
  - ✓ Burma ceded Arakan and Tenasserim to the British,
  - ✓ Accepted British influence in Assam and Manipur,
  - ✓ Agreed to pay a heavy indemnity,
  - ✓ Allowed the posting of a British resident at Ava.
- The treaty marked the beginning of British political dominance in Burma.

Q 28. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: Nizam Ali Khan of Hyderabad became the first Indian ruler to accept the Subsidiary Alliance in 1798. This marked the beginning of British indirect political dominance over princely states. The alliance reduced the independence of Hyderabad and increased British influence in the Deccan.
- The sequence of major states accepting the formal Subsidiary Alliance under Wellesley: Hyderabad (1798 & 1800) → Mysore (1799) → Tanjore (1799) → Awadh (1801) → Peshwa/Bassein (1802)
- Key terms of the Subsidiary Alliance: (1) Station British troops permanently in the state; (2) Pay subsidy for their maintenance (or cede territory); (3) Dismiss French/other foreign advisors; (4) Conduct no foreign negotiations without British approval; (5) Accept a British Resident at court

— while Britain promised non-interference in internal affairs.

- Statement 2 is incorrect: The Battle of Buxar occurred long before the Subsidiary Alliance system was introduced. After the Battle of Buxar and the Treaty of Allahabad, Awadh came under increasing British influence, but it was not placed under the Subsidiary Alliance in 1765.
- Awadh after Buxar (1765) entered an informal proto-subsidiary arrangement — maintaining British troops and paying subsidies — making it the forerunner of the system. The Nizam of Hyderabad (1798) was the first to accept the formal, well-defined Subsidiary Alliance under Wellesley.
- The concept of Subsidiary Alliance was originally invented by French Governor Dupleix, but was systematically formalised and aggressively used by Lord Wellesley (1798–1805).
- The Subsidiary Alliance system itself was formally developed later by Lord Wellesley around 1798. Awadh accepted the alliance only during Wellesley's period.

Q 29. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: It was an orthodox Islamic revivalist movement that aimed to propagate the pure teachings of the Quran and Hadith.
  - ✓ The Deoband Movement emphasised:
  - ✓ Strict adherence to Islamic principles,
  - ✓ Teachings of the Quran and Hadith,
  - ✓ Simplicity in religious life,
  - ✓ Revival of traditional Islamic learning.
- The Deoband Movement was co-founded by Maulana Muhammad Qasim Nanautavi and Maulana Rashid Ahmad Gangohi at Deoband, Saharanpur (UP) in 1866. it had twin objectives: (1) to propagate pure teachings of the Quran and Hadith, and (2) to keep alive the spirit of jihad against foreign (British) rule.
- It opposed practices considered un-Islamic and aimed to preserve Islamic identity under British rule.
- Statement 2 is incorrect: The Deoband Movement and the Aligarh Movement led by Sir Syed Ahmad Khan had very different approaches.
  - ✓ The Aligarh Movement promoted modern Western education, scientific learning, and cooperation with the British.
  - ✓ In contrast, the Deoband Movement emphasised traditional Islamic education and was generally critical of excessive Western influence.

- ✓ In 1888, Deoband ulema issued a formal fatwa against Sir Syed's organisations — the United Patriotic Association and Muhammedan Anglo-Oriental Association — as a direct rejection of his pro-British approach. Significantly, unlike the Aligarh Movement (which later supported the Muslim League), the Deoband Movement aligned with the Indian National Congress and supported composite Indian nationalism under leaders like Mahmud-ul-Hasan."

Q 30. Ans. D

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: It strictly separated the revenue administration from the judicial administration.
- Before Cornwallis, revenue officials often exercised judicial powers as well. Cornwallis separated:
  - ✓ Revenue administration from
  - ✓ Judicial administration
- To ensure greater efficiency and reduce misuse of authority. Different officers and courts were assigned separate responsibilities.
- Statement 2 is correct: It stripped the Zamindars of their traditional police powers.
  - ✓ Under earlier systems, zamindars exercised local policing functions in their areas. Cornwallis removed these police powers from zamindars and transferred law-and-order responsibilities to a regular police administration under British control. This helped strengthen centralised colonial authority.
- Statement 3: It established the principle of sovereignty of law over all British officials in India.
  - ✓ The Cornwallis reforms emphasised the rule of law and attempted to place even Company officials within a legal framework. The Code sought to reduce arbitrary administration and corruption by making officials accountable to legal procedures and courts.

Q 31. Ans. B

Explanation:

- The Paramahansa Mandali was one of the earliest socio-religious reform movements in Maharashtra, founded in 1849 in Bombay (now Mumbai). It worked as a secret society and aimed at radical social reforms.
- Founder and Leadership:

- ✓ The Mandali was founded by Dadoba Pandurang along with a small group of like-minded reformers.
- ✓ Dadoba Pandurang is rightly regarded as its principal founder and ideologue.
- ✓ Later, reformers like his brother Atmaram Pandurang also became associated with similar reformist ideas.

Q 32. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is incorrect: The Charter Act of 1813 did not fully abolish the trade monopoly of the East India Company. It ended the Company's monopoly over Indian trade, but with important exceptions:
- The Company retained monopoly over trade in tea and trade with China. Therefore, the monopoly was partially removed, not completely abolished.
- Statement 2 is correct: The Charter Act of 1813 is significant because it was the first official step toward state responsibility for education in India. It mandated the Company to spend ₹1 lakh per year on the promotion of education, literature, and science among Indians. This provision laid the foundation for later educational policies in British India.

Q 33. Ans. C

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: In 1877, Lord Lytton organised the magnificent Delhi Durbar of 1877 to proclaim Queen Victoria as the Empress of India. At the same time, India was facing the severe Great Famine of 1876–78, particularly affecting Madras, Bombay, Mysore, and parts of the Deccan. Millions of people suffered and died due to famine and inadequate relief measures.
- Statement 2 is correct: Lord Lytton passed the Indian Arms Act of 1878, which prohibited Indians from possessing arms without a government license.
- The law was considered discriminatory because:
  - ✓ Europeans were largely exempt
  - ✓ Indians faced strict restrictions.
- This Act was viewed as another example of racial discrimination under British rule.

Q 34. Ans. D

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is incorrect: The Ramosi Uprisings did not occur in the eastern Godavari region of Andhra Pradesh. They took place mainly in the Western Ghats region of Maharashtra, especially around Poona (Pune). The Ramosis were a tribal and martial community associated with western India. Also, the revolt is generally regarded as a tribal/community uprising, not a peasant movement.

- The Ramosis were a martial hill tribe of Maharashtra who traditionally served as fort guards and watchmen under the Maratha rulers. After the British defeat of Peshwa Baji Rao II (1818) and the annexation of Maratha territories, the Ramosis lost their traditional employment and patron, which became the primary structural cause of their repeated uprisings.”
- Statement 2 is incorrect: The Ramosi Uprisings rose under Chittur Singh in 1822 and plundered the country around Satara. Again, there were eruptions in 1825-26 under Umaji Naik of Poona and his supporter Babu Trimbakji Sawant, and the disturbances continued till 1829. The disturbance occurred again in 1839 over the deposition and banishment of Raja Pratap Singh of Satara, and disturbances also erupted in 1840-41.

Q 35. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The devastating Great Bengal Famine of 1770 created widespread suffering in Bengal. Heavy taxation by the East India Company, combined with famine conditions, ruined peasants and religious groups dependent on alms and pilgrimages. The British also imposed restrictions on the movement of sanyasis and faqirs and denied them traditional rights and grants. The sanyasis were originally peasants displaced from their land. They were soon joined by dispossessed minor zamindars, disbanded soldiers, and the rural poor — making the rebellion a broader social uprising. The revolt was eventually suppressed after prolonged military action by Warren Hastings.
- Statement 2 is correct: Bankim Chandra Chattopadhyay's famous novel 'Anandamath' is based on this rebellion. Anandamath by Bankim Chandra Chattopadhyay was inspired by the Sanyasi Rebellion. The novel became famous for the patriotic song "Vande Mataram", which later became an important nationalist slogan during the freedom movement. Bankim also wrote a second novel, Devi Chaudhurani (1884), based on the same rebellion — centred on the female leader Debi Chaudhurani, recognising women's role in early anti-British resistance.

- Statement 3 is incorrect: The rebellion was not exclusively Hindu. Along with Hindu sanyasis, Muslim faqirs also actively participated in the movement. Leaders such as Majnu Shah played a major role. Therefore, the uprising represented cooperation between Hindu and Muslim religious groups against British oppression.

Q 36. Ans. D

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: Lord Wellesley introduced the Censorship of Press Act (1799) during the period of the Napoleonic Wars. The British feared that the French might invade India and use newspapers to spread anti-British ideas. Therefore, strict press regulations were imposed:
  - ✓ newspapers had to obtain prior government approval before publication,
  - ✓ and criticism of the government was restricted.
  - ✓ This marked the beginning of official press control in British India.
- Statement 2 is correct: Charles Metcalfe is popularly called the "Liberator of the Indian Press."
- In 1835, he removed many restrictive press regulations and allowed newspapers greater freedom. His liberal press policy encouraged the growth of Indian journalism and public opinion.
- Statement 3 is correct: Hicky's Bengal Gazette, also known as The Bengal Gazette or Calcutta General Advertiser, was started in 1780 by James Augustus Hicky.
- It was the first printed newspaper in India and became famous for criticising East India Company officials, which eventually led to government action against Hicky.

Q 37. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Gopal Hari Deshmukh, popularly known as Lokahitawadi, was an important social reformer from Maharashtra. Through his writings, he criticised orthodox social practices and promoted rational thinking, women's education, and social equality.
- Mahadev Govind Ranade was one of the leading reformers of Maharashtra. He was associated with:
  - ✓ the Prarthana Samaj,
  - ✓ widow remarriage movement
  - ✓ women's education
  - ✓ and social reform activities.
- He advocated gradual reform through constitutional and peaceful methods.

- Kandukuri Veeresalingam was a major social reformer, but he belonged to Andhra Pradesh (Madras Presidency), not Maharashtra. He worked for widow remarriage and women's education in Telugu-speaking regions.
- Therefore, he was not prominently associated with the social reform movement of Western India/Maharashtra.
- Balshastri Jambhekar is regarded as the "Father of Marathi Journalism." He played an important role in spreading modern ideas and social reform in Maharashtra through newspapers and public writings.

Q 38. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Assertion (A) is true: The British East India Company decisively won the Battle of Buxar in October 1764, defeating the combined forces of Mir Qasim (the Nawab of Bengal), Shuja-ud-Daula (the Nawab of Awadh), and Shah Alam II (the Mughal Emperor).
- Reason (R) is true: The British forces at the Battle of Buxar were indeed commanded by Major Hector Munro, and his leadership and superior military tactics played a crucial role in their victory.
- Why (R) is not the completely correct explanation of (A):
- While Major Munro's leadership was a factor, it is not the sole or even the primary structural explanation for why the British won. The victory at Buxar was the result of a combination of factors, including:
  - ✓ The superior discipline, training, and artillery of the East India Company's army.
  - ✓ The lack of coordination, deep internal divisions, and mistrust among the Indian allies (Mir Qasim, Shuja-ud-Daula, and Shah Alam II).
- The overall decline in the administrative and military capabilities of the Indian powers relative to the organised, modern military machine the British had developed.

Q 39. Ans. C

Explanation:

- Amrita Bazar Patrika was founded by Sisir Kumar Ghosh and Motilal Ghosh. It became one of the most influential nationalist newspapers during the freedom movement.
- Som Prakash was associated with Ishwar Chandra

Vidyasagar and played an important role in social reform and public opinion in Bengal.

- Voice of India was founded by Dadabhai Naoroji to spread nationalist ideas and criticise British economic exploitation in India.
- The Hindu was founded in Madras in 1878, and G. Subramania Iyer was one of its leading founders and editors. It became an important nationalist newspaper in South India.

Q 40. Ans. D

Explanation:

- Bhil Uprisings — Western Ghats (Khandesh)
  - ✓ The Bhils inhabited the Khandesh region and the nearby hilly tracts of western India. The Bhil uprisings took place mainly in the early 19th century against British authority, revenue policies, and local exploitation.
- Kol Uprising — Chhotanagpur region
  - ✓ The Kol uprising occurred in the Chhotanagpur plateau region during 1831–32. Tribal groups revolted against:
    - British interference
    - Exploitation by landlords and moneylenders
    - Encroachment on tribal lands.
- Khasi Uprising — Garo-Jaintia hills
  - ✓ The Khasi uprising took place in the hill regions of present-day Meghalaya under the leadership of Tirot Sing. The movement was centered in the Khasi hills but is often broadly associated with the Khasi-Garo-Jaintia hill region of northeast India in historical references.

Q 41. Ans. C

Explanation:

- During his tenure as Governor-General (1848–1856), Dalhousie aggressively expanded the British Empire in India through conquests (like Punjab in 1849) and the Doctrine of Lapse (like Awadh in 1856). To manage these newly acquired and often turbulent territories, he introduced the centralised "Non-Regulation System." Under this system, the complex laws and procedures of the older "Regulation Provinces" (like Bengal) were suspended.

Q 42. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: After the Revolt of 1857, British military policy was guided by the principle of “division and counterpoise,” and the Peel Commission was constituted to comprehensively reorganise the army on this basis.

- Statement 2 is incorrect: The British decided they could no longer depend on Indian loyalty. As a result, “the number of Indian soldiers was drastically reduced even as the number of European soldiers was increased”. This means the ratio of European to Indian troops was increased, not decreased.
- Statement 3 is correct: To prevent future uprisings, the British adopted the concept of “divide and rule” by creating separate units based on caste, community, and region. They actively categorised groups, ensuring that new recruits “were to be drawn from the ‘martial’ races of Punjab, Nepal, and north-western frontier who had proved loyal to the British during the Revolt”.

Q 43. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: Raja Rammohan Roy set up the Atmiya Sabha (or Society of Friends) in Calcutta in the year 1814. His explicit purpose was to propagate the monotheistic ideals of the Vedanta and to “campaign against idolatry, caste rigidities, meaningless rituals and other social ills”.
- Statement 2 is incorrect: He did not oppose modern Western education; in fact, he strongly supported it and did much to disseminate its benefits to his countrymen. For example, he supported David Hare’s efforts to found the Hindu College in 1817. Furthermore, in 1825, he established a Vedanta college where courses in both Indian learning and “Western social and physical sciences were offered”.
- Statement 3 is correct: When he started his anti-sati struggle in 1818, he specifically “cited sacred texts to prove his contention that no religion sanctioned the burning alive of widows”.
- Statement 4 is correct: His long-term agenda through the Brahmo Samaj was to “purify Hinduism and to preach monotheism,” which was based heavily on the “twin pillars of reason and the Vedas and Upanishads.” He also translated the Vedas and five Upanishads into Bengali specifically to prove his conviction that “ancient Hindu texts support monotheism”.

Q 44. Ans. B

Explanation:

- The General Service Enlistment Act (1856) was passed by Lord Canning’s government. The Act ordered all future recruits of the Bengal Army to give an undertaking to be ready to serve anywhere their services might be required, both within and outside India. This became a significant grievance because it came into conflict with the religious beliefs of the high-caste Hindu sepoys, as crossing the seas meant a loss of caste for them.

Q 45. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Pair 1 is correctly matched: Warren Hastings followed the “Ring Fence” policy. This strategy involved defending the frontiers of neighbouring states to protect British territories from external threats, effectively creating buffer zones (such as defending Awadh to protect Bengal from the Marathas and Afghans).
- Pair 2 is correctly matched: Sir John Shore is associated with the Policy of Non-Intervention (or non-interference). A prominent example of this policy in action was his strict neutrality and refusal to intervene when the Marathas attacked the Nizam of Hyderabad at the Battle of Khardā in 1795.
- Pair 3 is incorrectly matched: The First Factory Act (1881), which aimed to improve the working conditions of factory labour and primarily dealt with regulating child labour, was passed during the viceroyalty of Lord Ripon (1880–1884), not Lord Lytton. Lord Lytton’s tenure (1876–1880) was instead marked by controversial measures like the Vernacular Press Act and the Arms Act of 1878.

Q 46. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Treaty of Allahabad (1765) — Battle of Buxar (1764): Following the decisive defeat of the combined Indian forces at the Battle of Buxar in October 1764, Robert Clive concluded two important treaties at Allahabad in August 1765. One was signed with the Nawab of Awadh, Shuja-ud-Daula, and the other with the Mughal Emperor, Shah Alam II, which famously granted the Diwani rights of Bengal, Bihar, and Orissa to the East India Company.
- Treaty of Seringapatam (1792) — Third Anglo-Mysore War (1790–1792): This treaty marked the conclusion of the Third Anglo-Mysore War. Signed by Tipu Sultan and Lord Cornwallis, its terms were severe: Tipu had to surrender nearly half of his territory (which was divided among the British, the Nizam, and the Marathas), pay a massive war indemnity of three crore rupees, and surrender two of his sons as hostages to the British until the amount was paid.

- Treaty of Bassein (1802) — Second Anglo-Maratha War (1803–1805): Fleeing from the Holkars, Peshwa Baji Rao II signed the Treaty of Bassein in December 1802, accepting the British Subsidiary Alliance. This surrender of Maratha independence by the Peshwa was unacceptable to other Maratha leaders (specifically the Sindhia and Bhonsle families), directly provoking them to challenge the British, which ignited the Second Anglo-Maratha War.
- Treaty of Lahore (1846) — First Anglo-Sikh War (1845–1846): The First Anglo-Sikh War concluded with the Treaty of Lahore, signed on March 8, 1846. The British dictated harsh terms to the defeated Sikhs, which included ceding the Jalandhar Doab (the territory between the Beas and Sutlej rivers) to the British, paying a war indemnity of over one crore rupees, and the establishment of a British Resident at Lahore.

Q 47. Ans. D

Explanation:

- Assertion (A) is False: The British East India Company did not face “little to no resistance.” In fact, their conquest of India was characterised by intense, prolonged, and bloody conflicts with various powerful regional states. The text dedicates extensive chapters to these struggles, including:
  - ✓ The Battle of Plassey (1757) and the Battle of Buxar (1764) to secure Bengal.
  - ✓ The Four Anglo-Mysore Wars (1767–1799) against Haidar Ali and Tipu Sultan, who offered fierce resistance to British expansion in the south.
  - ✓ The Three Anglo-Maratha Wars (1775–1818), which were required to finally break the power of the Maratha confederacy, the most formidable contenders for the Mughal legacy.
  - ✓ The Two Anglo-Sikh Wars (1845–1849) to conquer the Punjab region.
- Reason is True: Following the death of Aurangzeb in 1707, the Mughal Empire’s central authority collapsed. This fragmentation allowed provincial governors and local leaders to assert independence, resulting in the rise of powerful regional states like Mysore under Haidar Ali, the Maratha Empire, and the Sikh Empire under Ranjit Singh.

Q 48. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: Wood’s Despatch (1854), named after Sir Charles Wood (President of the Board of Control), was the first comprehensive scheme for the spread of education in India. It is widely considered the “Magna Carta of English Education in India”.
- Statement 2 is incorrect: It did not recommend English as the sole medium of instruction at all levels. In fact, it systematised a clear linguistic hierarchy: it recommended vernacular languages (local languages) for primary schools in villages, Anglo-Vernacular languages for high schools, and English was recommended as the medium of instruction exclusively for higher studies (affiliated colleges and universities).
- Statement 3 is correct: The Despatch explicitly laid stress on the importance of female education and vocational training, alongside recommending the establishment of teachers’ training institutions.

Q 49. Ans. C

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is incorrect: Lord Cornwallis (governor-general, 1786-93), not Lord William Bentinck, was the first to bring into existence and organise the civil services. Consequently, he is known as the “Father of Civil Service in India”.
- Statement 2 is correct: In 1863, Satyendra Nath Tagore became the first Indian to successfully qualify for the Indian Civil Service.
- Statement 3 is incorrect: Lord Lytton did not raise the age limit to encourage Indians; instead, he reduced it. Under Lytton in 1878, the maximum permissible age for appearing at the examination was reduced to nineteen, which was part of a systematic effort to keep Indians out of the coveted ranks of the Indian Civil Service.

Q 50. Ans. C

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The Indian Association of Calcutta was founded by Surendranath Banerjea and Ananda Mohan Bose. This association sponsored an all-India conference (the Indian National Conference) which first took place in Calcutta from December 28 to 30, 1883.
- Statement 2 is correct: The association and its conference acted as a forerunner to the Indian

National Congress as an all-India nationalist organisation, and it later successfully merged with the Indian National Congress in the year 1886.

Q 51. Ans. C

Explanation:

- V.D. Savarkar: In his book The Indian War of Independence, 1857, Savarkar systematically interpreted the revolt as a planned and organised “First War of Indian Independence.” He viewed the uprising not merely as a mutiny of sepoys, but as a deliberate, nationalist struggle to overthrow foreign domination and secure self-rule.
- S.N. Sen: In his work Eighteen Fifty-Seven, Sen offered a more nuanced assessment. He noted that while it began as a military mutiny, it eventually took on the character of a popular rebellion where the civil population joined the sepoys

Q 52. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Regulating Act (1773)
  - ✓ This was the first major attempt by the British Parliament to regulate the affairs of the East India Company in India.
  - ✓ Key features:
    - Created the post of Governor-General of Bengal.
    - The post of Governor-General of Bengal was created.
    - Warren Hastings became the first Governor-General.
    - A four-member Executive Council was formed.
    - The Presidencies of Bombay and Madras were subordinated to Bengal in important matters.
    - A Supreme Court was established at Calcutta in 1774.
- Pitt's India Act (1784)
  - ✓ This Act established dual control:
    - Introduced the system of Dual Control:
      - ◇ The Company retained commercial functions,
      - ◇ while political affairs came under the British Government.
    - A Board of Control was created in Britain to supervise civil, military, and revenue matters.
    - The Governor-General's authority over Bombay and Madras was strengthened.

● Licensing Regulations under John Adam (1823)

- ✓ Key Provisions:
  - Every newspaper or journal required a government license for publication.
  - The government could cancel licenses at any time.
  - These regulations particularly targeted Indian-owned newspapers that criticised British policies.
- ✓ Raja Ram Mohan Roy strongly opposed these restrictions because he considered freedom of the press essential for public awareness and reform.

● Vernacular Press Act (1878)

- ✓ Passed during the tenure of Lord Lytton, this Act aimed to suppress nationalist criticism in Indian-language newspapers.
- ✓ It became popularly known as the “Gagging Act.”
- It was enacted at a time when Indian-language newspapers were increasingly criticising:
  - ✓ British economic exploitation
  - ✓ famine policies
  - ✓ and racial discrimination
- Important Features:
  - ✓ The Act applied only to newspapers published in Indian vernacular languages.
  - ✓ District magistrates were empowered to confiscate printing presses and demand security deposits.
  - ✓ No right of appeal was provided to the affected newspapers.

Q 53. Ans. B

Explanation:

- The Treaty of Bassein was signed on 31 December 1802 between the English East India Company and Peshwa Baji Rao II.
- The treaty was concluded after Baji Rao II was defeated by Yashwant Rao Holkar in the Battle of Poona and sought British military support to regain his position.
- Under the treaty:
  - ✓ Baji Rao II accepted the Subsidiary Alliance system of Lord Wellesley.
  - ✓ He agreed to maintain British troops in his territory.
  - ✓ He surrendered control over foreign affairs to the British.

Q 54. Ans. D

Explanation:

- Permanent Settlement: Introduced by Lord Cornwallis in 1793, this system was primarily implemented in Bengal, Bihar, and Orissa (and later in parts of northern Madras and Varanasi). Under this arrangement, the zamindars were recognised as the permanent owners of the land, provided they paid a fixed, unalterable revenue to the East India Company.
- Ryotwari System: Initially developed by Alexander Read and Thomas Munro, it was formally introduced by Munro in 1820. It was primarily implemented in the Madras and Bombay Presidencies, along with parts of Assam and Coorg. Unlike the Permanent Settlement, the Company bypassed intermediaries and made revenue settlements directly with the individual peasant or cultivator (ryot), who was recognised as the owner of his plot of land, subject to the payment of revenue.
- Mahalwari System: Devised originally by Holt Mackenzie in 1822 and later reformed under Lord William Bentinck in 1833, this system was primarily implemented in the North-Western Provinces, the Punjab, and parts of Central India. The settlement was made not with individual cultivators but with the entire village community or estate (known as a mahal), with the village headmen or leaders responsible for collecting and paying the revenue.

Q 55. Ans. A

Explanation:

- East India Association — 1866
  - ✓ Founded by Dadabhai Naoroji in London to discuss Indian issues and influence British public opinion.
- Poona Sarvajanik Sabha — 1870
  - ✓ Associated with leaders like M.G. Ranade, it acted as a bridge between the government and the people.
- Indian Association — 1876
  - ✓ Founded by Surendranath Banerjee and Ananda Mohan Bose to unite Indians politically and promote nationalist consciousness.
- Madras Mahajan Sabha — 1884
  - ✓ Founded by M. Viraraghavachari, G. Subramania Iyer, and P. Anandacharlu.

Q 56. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Robert Clive — Establishment of Dual Government in Bengal

- ✓ After the Battle of Buxar and the grant of Diwani rights in 1765, Robert Clive introduced the Dual Government system in Bengal in 1765.
- ✓ The Company controlled revenue collection.
- ✓ The Nawab handled administration and justice nominally.

- Warren Hastings — Abolition of Dual Government

- ✓ Warren Hastings abolished the Dual Government system in 1772 because it had led to corruption and administrative chaos.

- Lord William Bentinck — Abolition of Sati

- ✓ Lord William Bentinck abolished the practice of Sati through Regulation XVII in 1829, with support from Raja Ram Mohan Roy.

- Lord Dalhousie — Introduction of Railways

- ✓ Lord Dalhousie is regarded as the chief architect of railway development in India. The first railway line between Bombay and Thane started in 1853 during his tenure.

Q 57. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Brahmo Samaj (1828): Raja Rammohan Roy founded the Brahmo Sabha in August 1828, which was later renamed the Brahmo Samaj. This makes it the earliest among the listed organisations.
- Prarthana Samaj (1867): The Prarthana Samaj was established in Bombay by Dr. Atmaram Pandurang in 1867, heavily influenced by the ideas of the Brahmo Samaj but focused on the western region of India.
- Arya Samaj (1875): The Arya Samaj, a revivalist movement that sought to re-establish the authority of the Vedas, was founded by Swami Dayananda Saraswati in Bombay in 1875.
- Ramakrishna Mission (1897): Swami Vivekananda founded the Ramakrishna Mission in 1897, named after his guru Ramakrishna Paramahansa, to combine humanitarian relief work with spiritual teachings.

Q 58. Ans. D

Explanation:

- Santhal Revolt (1855–56)

- ✓ The Santhals of present-day Jharkhand and Bengal revolted against:
  - oppressive zamindars
  - moneylenders
  - and British revenue policies.
- ✓ The movement was led by:

- Sidhu Murmu
- Kanhu Murmu.
- Indigo Revolt (1859–60)
  - ✓ Peasants in Bengal revolted against European indigo planters who forced them to cultivate indigo under exploitative conditions.
  - ✓ The revolt became famous through:
    - play Nil Darpan by Dinabandhu Mitra.
- Pabna Agrarian Unrest (1873–76)
  - ✓ This movement occurred in eastern Bengal against:
    - excessive rent demands
    - Illegal exactions by zamindars.
    - It was largely peaceful and organised through agrarian leagues.
- Deccan Riots (1875)
  - ✓ The peasants of Maharashtra revolted mainly against:
    - moneylenders
    - indebtedness
    - exploitation after the commercialisation of agriculture.
- The disturbances were concentrated in Poona and Ahmednagar districts.

Q 59. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: After the Industrial Revolution in Britain, large quantities of machine-made textiles and manufactured goods were exported to India.
  - ✓ Impact:
    - British goods were cheaper and mass-produced.
    - Indian handicrafts could not compete with factory-made products.
    - Indian markets were flooded with Manchester textiles.
  - ✓ At the same time:
    - Indian goods faced heavy import duties in Britain
    - while British goods entered India almost duty-free.
- Statement 2 is correct: As artisans, spinners, and weavers lost their livelihood:
  - ✓ many were forced to migrate to villages,
  - ✓ and became dependent on agriculture.
- This process is called ruralisation of the Indian economy.
- Consequences:
  - ✓ excessive pressure on land,

- ✓ fragmentation of holdings,
- ✓ rise in rural poverty and indebtedness.
- Thus, deindustrialisation transformed many skilled artisans into poor peasants or agricultural labourers.
- Statement 3 is incorrect: India did not industrialise rapidly enough during the 19th century to absorb the displaced artisans.
  - ✓ Reality:
    - Modern industries in India developed slowly and on a limited scale
    - Factory employment opportunities were very few
    - Wages were low
    - Most ruined artisans could not find alternative employment.
- As a result, many artisans fell into poverty rather than obtaining high-paying industrial jobs.
- Statement 4 is correct: Traditional urban handicraft centres suffered a massive decline.
- Examples:
  - ✓ Dacca, famous for fine muslin
  - ✓ Murshidabad, known for silk and textile production
- Lost their prosperity because British-manufactured goods replaced Indian handmade products.
- Many once-thriving artisan towns experienced:
  - ✓ unemployment
  - ✓ depopulation
  - ✓ and economic decline.

Q 60. Ans. A

Explanation:

- The Hindu Mela was founded in Calcutta in 1867 by Nabagopal Mitra (often with the assistance and inspiration of Rajnarain Bose and Dwijendranath Tagore). Because of his immense dedication to nationalistic causes, Nabagopal Mitra earned the moniker “National Mitra.”
- Objectives and Activities: The primary objective of the Hindu Mela was to awaken a sense of national pride and indigenous cultural consciousness among the people of Bengal. It sought to achieve this by:
  - ✓ Organising annual exhibitions of indigenous arts, crafts, and industrial products to promote self-reliance (swadeshi).
  - ✓ Fostering a spirit of nationalism through the recitation of nationalistic poetry and singing of patriotic songs.
  - ✓ Placing a strong emphasis on physical training and martial arts to build the physical prowess and courage of the youth.

Q 61. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is incorrect: The Indigo Revolt was centred mainly in Bengal, not Bihar.
- Causes:
  - ✓ Peasants were compelled to grow indigo instead of food crops.
  - ✓ They received very low payments from European planters.
  - ✓ Cultivation exhausted soil fertility.
  - ✓ Planters often used coercion and violence.
- Thus, the revolt was essentially a Bengal-based agrarian movement.
- Statement 2 is correct: An important feature of the Indigo Revolt was the support extended by the educated middle class and Bengali intellectuals.
  - ✓ Role of Intelligentsia:
    - Newspapers highlighted the exploitation of peasants.
    - Lawyers helped peasants fight legal battles.
    - Public opinion was mobilised against European indigo planters.
  - ✓ Notable contributions came from:
    - Harish Chandra Mukherjee through the newspaper Hindu Patriot,
    - Dinabandhu Mitra through his famous play Nil Darpan.
- Statement 3 is correct: Due to the intensity of the revolt and growing public criticism, the British government appointed the Indigo Commission in 1860.
- Findings of the Commission:
  - ✓ Indigo cultivation was based on coercion and oppression.
  - ✓ Peasants could not legally be forced to grow indigo.
  - ✓ The Commission's report weakened the indigo plantation system in Bengal.

Q 62. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is incorrect: Mangal Pandey belonged to the 34th Bengal Native Infantry, but the regiment was stationed at Barrackpore near Calcutta (Kolkata), not Meerut.
- Important Fact:
  - ✓ The incident involving Mangal Pandey took place on 29 March 1857 at Barrackpore.
  - ✓ The revolt at Meerut occurred later on 10 May 1857, which formally triggered the large-scale uprising.

- Statement 2 is correct: The introduction of the new Enfield rifle became a major cause of discontent among Indian sepoys.
- Reason:
  - ✓ Soldiers had to bite open the cartridges before loading the rifle.
  - ✓ Rumours spread that the cartridges were greased with:
    - ✓ cow fat (offensive to Hindus),
    - ✓ and pig fat (offensive to Muslims).
- This created widespread fear that the British were trying to destroy Indian religious beliefs and forcibly convert Indians to Christianity.
- Mangal Pandey attacked British officers in protest against these measures, becoming an early symbol of resistance.

Q 63. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The Treaty of Amritsar was indeed signed in 1809 between Maharaja Ranjit Singh and the British East India Company (specifically, it was negotiated by Charles Metcalfe on behalf of the British). The British wanted to secure their frontiers against a potential French threat, and Ranjit Singh reluctantly agreed to sign it when he realised the British forces were too strong to oppose at that time.
- Statement 2 is incorrect: The treaty did not fix the river Jhelum as the boundary. It established the river Sutlej as the boundary line between the Sikh Empire and British territories.
- The Consequence: By accepting the Sutlej as the boundary, Ranjit Singh had to give up his ambition of extending his rule over the Sikh states south of the river (the cis-Sutlej states), acknowledging British paramountcy over that region.

Q 64. Ans. C

Explanation:

- Lord Dalhousie is credited with introducing the electric telegraph system in India. The very first operational telegraph line was opened in 1853, connecting Calcutta with Agra over a distance of nearly 800 miles. Following this initial success, Dalhousie vastly expanded the network, eventually laying down 4,000 miles of telegraph lines to connect Calcutta with other major administrative and military centres like Bombay, Madras, and Peshawar.

Q 65. Ans. C

Explanation:

- William Sleeman is widely credited with the suppression of the organised groups of robbers and murderers known as the Thugs or Thuggee gangs during British rule in India.
- The Thugs operated across different parts of India and were notorious for:
  - ✓ looting travellers,
  - ✓ strangling victims,
  - ✓ carrying out secret criminal activities over long distances.
- They often disguised themselves as ordinary travellers and gained the confidence of victims before murdering them.

Role of William Sleeman

- William Sleeman was appointed by the British administration to lead operations against the Thugs in the 1830s during the tenure of Lord William Bentinck.
- Measures Taken:
  - ✓ establishment of a special Thuggee and Dacoity Department
  - ✓ use of intelligence networks and informers
  - ✓ systematic tracking of criminal gangs
  - ✓ arrest and prosecution of large numbers of Thugs

Q 66. Ans. C

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The French East India Company (Compagnie des Indes Orientales) was the last of the major European trading companies to enter India. It was established in 1664 during the reign of King Louis XIV. The initiative was taken by his famous finance minister, Jean-Baptiste Colbert. Unlike the English East India Company, which was a private enterprise, the French Company was heavily state-controlled and state-funded. This structural difference meant it often suffered from bureaucratic delays and a lack of autonomous decision-making, which ultimately contributed to its defeat against the British.
- Statement 2 is correct: Joseph François Dupleix, appointed as Governor-General in 1742, was their most ambitious leader, known for initiating the strategy of interfering in local Indian dynastic disputes to expand French political influence. Dupleix pioneered the strategy of utilising highly disciplined European troops to intervene in the internal succession disputes of Indian rulers (specifically in Hyderabad and the Carnatic).

- Statement 3 is incorrect: It was the English (under General Sir Eyre Coote) who decisively defeated the French (under Comte de Lally) at the Battle of Wandiwash in 1760. This crushing defeat shattered French imperial ambitions in India and reduced them to a few isolated trading posts.

Q 67. Ans. D

Explanation:

Hindu Patriot — Harish Chandra Mukherjee

- Harish Chandra Mukherjee was the famous editor of the newspaper Hindu Patriot.
- Importance:
  - ✓ The newspaper strongly criticised British policies.
  - ✓ It actively supported peasants during the Indigo Revolt.
  - ✓ It exposed the exploitation carried out by indigo planters.
  - ✓ Under Harish Chandra Mukherjee, Hindu Patriot became one of the leading nationalist newspapers of Bengal.

Mahratta — Bal Gangadhar Tilak

- Bal Gangadhar Tilak founded:
  - ✓ Kesari in Marathi, and
  - ✓ Mahratta in English in 1881.
- Importance:
  - ✓ These newspapers became powerful instruments for spreading nationalist ideas.
  - ✓ Tilak used them to criticise colonial rule and mobilise public opinion.
  - ✓ Through Kesari and Mahratta, Tilak popularised assertive nationalism.

Som Prakash — Ishwar Chandra Vidyasagar

- Som Prakash was associated with Ishwar Chandra Vidyasagar.
- Importance:
  - ✓ The paper promoted social reform and education.
  - ✓ It supported causes such as widow remarriage and women's education.
  - ✓ It also reflected growing public criticism of colonial policies.

Q 68. Ans. B

Explanation:

- The passage describes William Carey, one of the most influential Christian missionaries in colonial India.

- He arrived in India in the late 18th century and became closely associated with:
  - ✓ missionary activities,
  - ✓ modern printing,
  - ✓ vernacular education,
  - ✓ and linguistic studies.
- Major Contributions of William Carey
  - ✓ Serampore Mission Press
    - William Carey established the famous Serampore Mission Press at Serampore near Calcutta.
- Importance:
  - ✓ It became one of the most important printing presses in Asia.
  - ✓ Numerous books, translations, dictionaries, and educational materials were printed there.
  - ✓ It greatly contributed to the spread of printing technology in India.
- Translation of the Bible
  - ✓ Carey translated the Bible into several Indian languages, including:
    - Bengali
    - Sanskrit
    - Marathi
    - Hindi
    - Assamese.
- His linguistic work played an important role in the development and standardisation of Indian vernacular languages.
- Debendranath Tagore,
- and other educated elites.
- Objectives:
  - ✓ to place Indian grievances before the British Parliament
  - ✓ demand administrative reforms
  - ✓ and increase Indian participation in governance.
- Indian Association (1876)
  - ✓ Indian Association was founded in 1876 by:
    - Surendranath Banerjea
    - Ananda Mohan Bose.
  - ✓ Importance:
    - It aimed at creating strong public opinion on political questions.
    - It sought to unite Indians across provinces and communities.
    - It opposed racial discrimination and criticised colonial policies.
- The organisation played an important role in preparing the ground for an all-India political movement before the formation of the Indian National Congress.
- Bombay Presidency Association (1885)
  - ✓ The Bombay Presidency Association was established in 1885.
- Important Leaders:
  - ✓ Pherozeshah Mehta
  - ✓ K.T. Telang
  - ✓ and Badruddin Tyabji.
- Objectives:
  - ✓ political reforms
  - ✓ representation of Indian interests
  - ✓ and expansion of legislative councils.
- It became one of the important regional political organisations before the rise of the Indian National Congress.

Q 69. Ans. A

Explanation:

- The Landholders' Society was founded in 1838 in Bengal.
- Importance:
  - ✓ It is regarded as one of the earliest political associations in India.
  - ✓ It mainly represented the interests of zamindars and large landowners.
  - ✓ The organisation aimed to safeguard landlord interests against government policies.
  - ✓ Although limited in social base, it marked the beginning of organised political activity in colonial India.
- British Indian Association (1851)
  - ✓ British Indian Association was formed in 1851 by merging:
    - the Landholders' Society, and
    - the Bengal British India Society.
  - Important Leaders:
    - Radhakanta Deb,

Q 70. Ans. B

Explanation:

- The British conquest and annexation of Sindh took place in 1843 during the governor-generalship of Lord Ellenborough. The military campaign was led by Major General Sir Charles Napier.
- Following the disastrous First Anglo-Afghan War, the British were looking to restore their military prestige and secure the western frontiers. Sindh was ruled by the Talpur Amirs, who had previously signed treaties with the British.
- The Conquest: Charles Napier was sent to Sindh with full civil and military powers. He forced new, humiliating treaties upon the Amirs. When the local Baloch tribes rebelled in anger, Napier used it as a pretext to wage war. He decisively defeated the Amirs' forces at the battles of Miani and Dabo in 1843, leading to the complete annexation of Sindh.

Q 71. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is incorrect: The Treaty of Sagauli (1816) did not conclude the First Anglo-Sikh War. Instead, it was the decisive peace agreement that concluded the Anglo-Nepalese War (1814–1816), which was fought during the governor-generalship of Lord Hastings. The First Anglo-Sikh War was concluded much later by the Treaty of Lahore in 1846).
- Statement 2 is correct: The treaty was highly advantageous to the British and brought them significant territorial gains in the Himalayas. Under the terms of the Treaty of Sagauli:
  - ✓ The Gurkhas ceded the districts of Garhwal and Kumaon to the English East India Company.
  - ✓ Through these territorial cessions, the British formally acquired the sites for several prominent hill stations, most notably Shimla, Mussoorie, and Nainital.
  - ✓ The Gurkhas also abandoned their claims over the Tarai region and agreed to withdraw from Sikkim.

Q 72. Ans. C

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The Faraizi Movement (or Fara'idi Movement) was founded by Haji Shariat-Allah in 1818. Its primary scene of action was indeed in Faridpur in Eastern Bengal.
- Statement 2 is correct: The sect strongly supported the cause of the tenants against the oppressive zamindars (who were mostly Hindu, along with some Muslim landlords and British indigo planters). Under the leadership of Haji's son, Dudu Mian, the movement took a more revolutionary and political turn. He organised a paramilitary force to fight the zamindars and explicitly asked his followers not to pay rent to them.

Q 73. Ans. B

Explanation:

- The Namdhari Movement, also known as the Kuka Movement, was founded by Baba Ram Singh in the mid-19th century in Punjab.

- The movement began primarily as a religious reform movement within Sikhism but later developed a strong anti-British political character.
- Objectives of the Namdhari (Kuka) Movement
- The movement aimed to:
  - ✓ purify Sikh religion and practices
  - ✓ remove social evils
  - ✓ promote simplicity and moral discipline
  - ✓ and revive the teachings of the Sikh Gurus.
- The followers were called "Kukas" because of their ecstatic religious cries or "kuks" during devotional practices.
- Social Reform Measures
- Baba Ram Singh advocated:
  - ✓ simple marriages
  - ✓ opposition to caste distinctions
  - ✓ prohibition of alcohol and intoxicants
  - ✓ boycott of luxury goods
  - ✓ and promotion of indigenous products.
- Anti-British Political Character
- Over time, the movement adopted an anti-colonial stance because:
  - ✓ the British annexation of Punjab had weakened Sikh political authority
  - ✓ Christian missionary activities increased
  - ✓ and colonial policies generated resentment among Sikhs.
- The Kukas:
  - ✓ boycotted British institutions
  - ✓ rejected colonial laws
  - ✓ and attempted to build an independent Sikh identity free from British influence.

Q 74. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The Wahabi Movement was an important socio-religious and political movement in 19th-century India.
- Syed Ahmed Bareilvi, born in Rae Bareli, organised the movement in India during the early 19th century.
- Objectives:
  - ✓ purification of Islamic practices
  - ✓ removal of un-Islamic customs
  - ✓ revival of Islamic principles
  - ✓ and establishment of an Islamic society based on Sharia.
- Statement 2 is correct: Patna became one of the most important centres of the Wahabi Movement in India.
- Importance of Patna:

- ✓ It served as the organisational and communication headquarters.
- ✓ The movement spread from Patna to Bengal, Punjab, and North-Western regions.
- ✓ Several important Wahabi leaders operated from Bihar.

● Statement 3 is incorrect: Early Phase:

- ✓ Syed Ahmed Bareilvi primarily organised resistance against the Sikh Empire under Ranjit Singh in Punjab and the North-West region.
- ✓ He even declared jihad against Sikh rule and fought several battles before his death in 1831 at Balakot.

● Later Phase:

- ✓ Afterward, especially during the mid-19th century, the movement increasingly turned against British rule and colonial authority.

Q 75. Ans. D

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The Charter Act of 1853 was a significant constitutional landmark because, for the first time, it separated the legislative and executive functions of the Governor-General's council. It provided for the addition of six new members called 'legislative councillors' to the council. This newly constituted legislative wing functioned as a mini-Parliament, adopting the same procedures as the British Parliament.
- Statement 2 is correct: The Act formally introduced an open competition system for the selection and recruitment of civil servants, thereby depriving the Court of Directors of its monopoly and patronage over appointments. The covenanted civil service was thus thrown open to Indians as well. Following this, the Macaulay Committee (the Committee on the Indian Civil Service) was appointed in 1854 to implement this scheme.
- Statement 3 is correct: It introduced, for the first time, local representation in the Indian (Central) Legislative Council. Out of the six new legislative members added to the Governor-General's council, four members were appointed by the local (provincial) governments of Madras, Bombay, Bengal, and Agra.

Q 76. Ans. C

Explanation:

- Velu Thampi: Velu Thampi was the Dewan (Prime Minister) of the state of Travancore in present-day Kerala. He led a major rebellion against the British East India Company in 1808–1809. The revolt was triggered by the heavy financial burdens imposed on the state by the British Subsidiary Alliance and the arrogant behavior of the British Resident. He famously issued the "Kundara Proclamation" urging the people to rise up against the British.

- Bakshi Jagabandhu: Bakshi Jagabandhu Bidyadhar was the military commander of the forces of the King of Khurda. He was the primary leader of the famous Paika Rebellion (1817) in Odisha. The Paikas were a traditional landed militia who rose in armed revolt against the British due to oppressive land revenue policies, the abolition of their rent-free lands, and sharp increases in the price of salt.
- Gomdhar Konwar: Gomdhar Konwar was an Ahom prince who led the Ahom Revolt in 1828 in Assam. After the First Anglo-Burmese War (1824–1826), the British had promised to withdraw from Assam. When they broke this promise and instead attempted to annex the Ahom territories into the Company's dominions, Gomdhar Konwar organised a rebellion and was formally proclaimed king by his followers before the British suppressed the uprising.
- Dudu Mian : Dudu Mian (son of Haji Shariatullah) was the leader of the Faraizi Movement which operated primarily in Faridpur and other parts of Eastern Bengal. He transformed the religious movement into an agrarian and political one, organising tenants against the oppressive exactions of landlords and British planters.

Q 77. Ans. C

Explanation:

- John Nicholson: Brigadier-General John Nicholson was the crucial British commander who led the main storming party during the Siege of Delhi. On September 14, 1857, his forces successfully breached the Kashmir Gate and entered the city, which was the turning point in breaking the rebellion's stronghold in the north. However, during the intense street fighting that followed, Nicholson was shot in the chest and mortally wounded. He lived just long enough to hear that Delhi had been fully secured by the British, dying on September 23, 1857.

Other Information

- Sir Colin Campbell: He was the Commander-in-Chief of India who directed the relief and ultimate recapture of Lucknow, as well as the recapture of Kanpur. He survived the rebellion.
- General Hugh Rose: He commanded the Central

Indian Field Force and is famous for his campaign in Central India, specifically the siege of Jhansi and the capture of Gwalior, where he fought against Rani Lakshmibai and Tantia Tope.

- Colonel James Neill: He was known for his ruthless suppression of the mutiny in Banaras and Allahabad, and his brutal reprisals in Kanpur. He was killed in action, but this happened during the first relief of Lucknow, not at Delhi.

Q 78. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The First Carnatic War was essentially an extension of the Anglo-French rivalry in Europe caused by the War of the Austrian Succession. When the War of the Austrian Succession came to an end in 1748, it was concluded by the Treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle. Consequently, this treaty also brought an immediate end to the First Carnatic War in India.
- Statement 2 is incorrect: The French did not permanently retain Madras. Although the French forces under Dupleix and La Bourdonnais had successfully captured Madras during the war, the terms of the Treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle stipulated a mutual restoration of conquered territories. Therefore, Madras was handed back to the English, in exchange for the French regaining their lost territories in North America (specifically Louisbourg).

Q 79. Ans. C

Explanation:

- Doctrine of Lapse (1848 onwards): Lord Dalhousie introduced this aggressive annexation policy almost immediately upon arriving in India. Under this doctrine, any princely state without a direct natural heir would “lapse” to the British East India Company, denying adopted sons the right to rule. He applied this first to the state of Satara in 1848, followed by Jaitpur and Sambalpur (1849), Baghat (1850), Udaipur (1852), Jhansi (1853), and Nagpur (1854).
- Telegraph Service (1853): As covered in a previous question, Dalhousie is credited with introducing the electric telegraph to India. The first operational telegraph line was successfully opened in 1853, connecting Calcutta and Agra.
- Wood’s Despatch (1854): In 1854, Charles Wood, the President of the Board of Control, sent a comprehensive dispatch to Lord Dalhousie outlining a systematic plan for the spread of education in India. Often called the “Magna Carta of English Education in India,” it recommended the creation of a regular education department in every province, the establishment of universities in presidency towns, and support for vernacular education at the primary level.

- Widow Remarriage Act (1856): The Hindu Widows’ Remarriage Act was drafted by Lord Dalhousie’s administration (largely due to the relentless campaigning of reformers like Ishwar Chandra Vidyasagar). However, it was formally passed into law in 1856 by his successor, Lord Canning, shortly after Dalhousie left India.

Q 80. Ans. C

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct : The Hindu College of Calcutta was established in 1817. It was a pioneering institution in India because its primary objective was to provide modern, secular Western education—specifically in the English language, literature, and European sciences—to the Indian youth. This represented a major, progressive shift away from the traditional educational institutions of the time (such as the Calcutta Madrasa or the Sanskrit College), which focused primarily on oriental learning, classical languages, and religious texts.
- Statement 2 is correct: The foundation of the college was the result of a collaborative effort between progressive Indians and sympathetic Europeans. The initiative was spearheaded by the Scottish watchmaker and philanthropist David Hare, who was deeply committed to modernising Indian education. He found crucial, enthusiastic support from the great social reformer Raja Rammohan Roy.

Q 81. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The practice of Sati (or suttee) was formally declared illegal and punishable by criminal courts as culpable homicide under Regulation XVII of 1829. This historic legislation was enacted during the governor-generalship of Lord William Bentinck, largely due to the relentless campaigning and social reform efforts of Raja Rammohan Roy.
- Statement 2 is correct: When the law was first enacted in 1829, it was made applicable only to the Bengal Presidency. It was only in the following year, 1830, that the regulation was extended in slightly modified forms to the Madras and Bombay Presidencies.

- Statement 3 is incorrect: The ban was fiercely opposed by orthodox Hindu sections of society. They viewed the legislation as a direct British interference in their traditional religious customs. Conservative leaders, most notably Radhakanta Deb, established the Dharma Sabha specifically to counter the efforts of reformers like Rammohan Roy. The orthodox faction even went so far as to send a petition to the Privy Council in London appealing against the ban, though their appeal was ultimately dismissed.

Q 82. Ans. D

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The Licensing Regulations of 1823 were enacted by the acting Governor-General, John Adams. He was known for his reactionary views and took a strong stance against the freedom of the Indian press.
- Statement 2 is correct: Under these strict regulations, every printer and publisher was required to obtain a formal license from the government before establishing or using a printing press. Furthermore, the government reserved the absolute right to cancel the license at any time. Printing or publishing without a license was made a criminal offense, punishable by a severe fine or imprisonment.
- Statement 3 is correct: These draconian regulations were primarily aimed at suppressing Indian language newspapers and those edited by Indians. In direct protest against this severe curtailment of press freedom, the great social reformer Raja Rammohan Roy voluntarily ceased the publication of his pioneering Persian journal, Mirat-ul-Akbar.

Q 83. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Sir John Shore succeeded Lord Cornwallis as the Governor-General of Bengal, serving from 1793 to 1798. His tenure is most famous for his strict adherence to the Policy of Non-Intervention (or non-interference), which was originally dictated by the British Parliament in Pitt's India Act of 1784 to avoid costly wars in India.
- The Battle of Kharda (1795): The most significant test of this policy occurred when the Marathas launched a massive attack against the Nizam of Hyderabad. Despite the Nizam being a British ally and requesting military assistance, Sir John Shore steadfastly refused to intervene and help him.

Q 84. Ans. B

Explanation:

- The Battle of St. Thome (also known as the Battle of Adyar) was fought in 1746 during the First Carnatic War. When the French forces under Dupleix captured Madras, the English appealed to Anwar-ud-din, the Nawab of the Carnatic, for protection.
- The Battle: The Nawab sent a massive army of around 10,000 men, commanded by his son Mahfuz Khan, to force the French to vacate Madras. They were met by a tiny French detachment of only 700 to 1,000 men (which included a few hundred Europeans and trained Indian sepoys) led by Captain Paradise at St. Thome, on the banks of the Adyar River.

Q 85. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Vasudev Balwant Phadke: A clerk in the Military Finance Office in Poona, Phadke became disillusioned with British rule after being denied leave to visit his dying mother. He organised the Ramosi community into an insurgent force to overthrow British rule through an armed struggle, aiming to establish a Hindu Raj. He is considered a pioneer of the revolutionary movement in India.
- Chittur Singh: He led an earlier, more localised Ramosi Uprising (1822) in the Satara region following the annexation of the Maratha territories, but it lacked the organised revolutionary ideology Phadke later provided.
- Gombard Konwar: He was the leader of the Ahom Revolt (1828) in Assam, which broke out when the British failed to honour their promise of withdrawing from the region after the First Anglo-Burmese War.
- Tirath Singh: He was the leader of the Khasis (in present-day Meghalaya) who revolted in 1829 against the British attempt to build a road through their hills connecting the Brahmaputra and Surma valleys.

Q 86. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Calcutta Madrasa — Warren Hastings
  - ✓ Calcutta Madrasa was established in 1781 by Warren Hastings.

- ✓ Purpose:
  - to promote the study of Islamic law and Persian,
  - and to train Muslim law officers for colonial administration.
- ✓ The institution reflected the early British policy of promoting oriental learning.

● Sanskrit College — Jonathan Duncan

- ✓ Sanskrit College at Benares (Varanasi) was founded in 1791 by Jonathan Duncan.
- ✓ Objective:
  - promotion of Sanskrit studies
  - preservation of Hindu law and literature
  - training of pandits for judicial administration.
  - This institution also represented the Orientalist approach to education.

● Hindu College — David Hare

- ✓ Hindu College was founded in 1817 with major contributions from David Hare along with Raja Rammohan Roy and other Bengali reformers.
- ✓ Importance:
  - It became a major centre for Western education in Bengal.
  - It played a significant role in the Bengal Renaissance.
  - Many prominent nationalist and reformist leaders studied there.
  - Later, Hindu College developed into Presidency College.

● Fort William College — Lord Wellesley

- ✓ Fort William College was established in 1800 by Lord Wellesley.
- ✓ Purpose:
  - to train civil servants of the East India Company,
  - especially in Indian languages and administration.
  - The college contributed significantly to:
    - ◇ translation work
    - ◇ development of Indian vernacular literature
    - ◇ and administrative training

heavily championed progressive social reforms such as discarding caste distinctions, promoting widow remarriage, and advancing women's education. To ensure these reformist ideals reached the masses in the South, he also translated major Brahmo literature into Tamil and Telugu.

Q 88. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Siraj-ud-Daulah (1757): The Nawab of Bengal was assassinated in July 1757, shortly after his decisive defeat by Robert Clive at the Battle of Plassey.
- Hyder Ali (1782): The formidable ruler of Mysore died of cancer in December 1782 right in the middle of the Second Anglo-Mysore War, after which his son Tipu Sultan took over the command.
- Tipu Sultan (1799): Known as the "Tiger of Mysore," he died valiantly defending his capital, Srirangapatna, against the British forces during the Fourth Anglo-Mysore War in May 1799.
- Ranjit Singh (1839): The founder of the Sikh Empire died peacefully of a stroke in June 1839. His death ultimately created a power vacuum that led to the Anglo-Sikh Wars and the British annexation of Punjab.

Q 89. Ans. C

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The Government of India Act of 1858 (often called the Act for the Good Government of India) officially liquidated the British East India Company following the Revolt of 1857. It abolished the dual system of government (the Board of Control and the Court of Directors). In its place, it created a new office, the Secretary of State for India, who was a member of the British Cabinet and vested with complete authority over Indian administration. To assist him, the Act established a 15-member Council of India, which functioned as an advisory body.
- Statement 2 is correct: The Act fundamentally changed how the supreme authority in India was designated. The Governor-General of India was granted the additional, prestigious title of Viceroy (meaning the direct personal representative of the British Crown). He was styled as the Governor-General when dealing with the British Indian provinces, and as the Viceroy when interacting with the Indian princely states. Lord Canning thus became the last Governor-General under the Company and the first Viceroy under the Crown.

Q 87. Ans. C

Explanation:

- K. Shridharalu Naidu, who became the driving force of the Ved Samaj in Madras after being deeply inspired by Keshab Chandra Sen's visit in 1864. He reorganised the society—later renaming it the Brahmo Samaj of Southern India in 1871—and

Q 90. Ans. A*Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The First Carnatic War (1746–1748) was not indigenous to India; it was an immediate extension of the Anglo-French rivalry triggered by the outbreak of the War of the Austrian Succession in Europe in 1740. When Britain and France found themselves on opposing sides in Europe, their respective East India Companies inevitably began hostilities in India as well.
- Statement 2 is incorrect: The Second Carnatic War (1749–1754) had nothing to do with commercial trading rights in Surat. Instead, it was primarily fought over internal dynastic disputes and political succession in the Deccan region. Specifically, the French (under the ambitious Dupleix) and the English supported rival claimants for the thrones of Hyderabad (the Nizam) and the Carnatic (the Nawab of Arcot). The goal was to establish their own proxy rulers to gain vast territorial concessions and political hegemony in southern India.

Q 91. Ans. A*Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: Sri Ramakrishna Paramahansa (born Gadadhar Chattopadhyay) spent the majority of his adult life serving as a priest at the famous Dakshineswar Kali Temple, located on the banks of the Hooghly River near Calcutta. It was here that he experienced his profound spiritual visions and attracted a massive following of intellectuals and spiritual seekers.
- Statement 2 is correct: A central pillar of his teachings was the fundamental unity of all religions. Through his own spiritual experiments, which included practising the tenets of Hinduism, Islam, and Christianity, he concluded that all religious paths ultimately lead to the same supreme reality or God. His famous Bengali saying, “Yato mat, tato path” (As many faiths, so many paths), perfectly encapsulates this philosophy of universal tolerance and acceptance.
- Statement 3 is incorrect: Sri Ramakrishna was purely a mystic and a spiritual guide; he did not engage in large-scale organisational work or institutional social reform during his lifetime. The nationwide network of schools, hospitals, dispensaries, and relief organisations was actually established by his chief disciple, Swami Vivekananda, who founded the Ramakrishna Mission in 1897, more than a decade after his master’s death. Vivekananda took Ramakrishna’s spiritual teachings and practically applied them to the ethos of social service (Daridra Narayan Seva—serving God through humanity).

Q 92. Ans. C*Explanation:

- Assertion (A) is true: The state of Awadh (Oudh) was annexed by Lord Dalhousie in 1856. However, because Awadh had been a loyal ally to the British for decades, Dalhousie could not simply conquer it. Instead, he relied on a report by Colonel James Outram (the British Resident at Lucknow), which claimed that the administration of the state was completely corrupt and ruined. Dalhousie annexed Awadh on the official grounds of “misgovernance” or maladministration.
- Reason (R) is false: Nawab Wajid Ali Shah did not die without an heir, nor was he dead at the time of the annexation. When the British annexed Awadh, he was deposed, stripped of his power, and exiled to Calcutta (where he spent the rest of his life on a pension). Furthermore, the Doctrine of Lapse was not applied to Awadh. The Doctrine of Lapse was only applied to states without a natural, biological heir (such as Jhansi, Satara, and Nagpur). Wajid Ali Shah had multiple heirs, including his young son Birjis Qadr, whom his wife Begum Hazrat Mahal famously crowned as the Nawab during the 1857 Rebellion.

Q 93. Ans. D*Explanation:

- English Factory at Surat (1613): After Captain Thomas Best successfully defeated the Portuguese fleet at the Battle of Swally (Hole) in 1612, Mughal Emperor Jahangir was highly impressed by British naval superiority. Consequently, in 1613, Jahangir issued a royal farman (decree) permitting the English East India Company to establish its first permanent trading factory at Surat under the leadership of Thomas Aldworth.
- Fort St. George, Madras (1639): In 1639, a British merchant named Francis Day successfully negotiated with the local ruler, the Raja of Chandragiri, to obtain a lease for the city of Madraspatnam. The English built a fortified factory there to protect their trade, which was named Fort St. George. This soon became the headquarters for the English settlements on the Coromandel Coast.

- Fort William, Calcutta (1700): In 1698, the English acquired the zamindari (landholding rights) of three crucial villages in Bengal: Sutanuti, Gobindapur, and Kalikata. They built a fortified settlement around these villages to secure their interests. In 1700, this fortification was officially named Fort William (after King William III of England), and it became the seat of the new eastern Presidency, with Sir Charles Eyre appointed as its first President.

Q 94. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Babu Kunwar Singh was a prominent Rajput zamindar (landlord) of Jagdishpur, near Arrah in Bihar. Despite being nearly 80 years old when the revolt broke out, he assumed command of the rebel sepoys who had mutinied at Danapur. He became the chief organiser and the most formidable leader of the fight against the British in the Bihar region. He proved to be a brilliant military tactician, engaging in successful guerrilla warfare against British forces until he died from battle wounds in April 1858.

Other Information

- Khan Bahadur Khan: He led the rebellion in Bareilly (the Rohilkhand region).
- Maulvi Ahmadullah: He was the outstanding and fiercely anti-British leader of the rebellion in Faizabad (Awadh region).
- Tantia Tope: He was a brilliant guerrilla commander who primarily operated in central India, fighting alongside Nana Sahib in Kanpur and later assisting Rani Lakshmibai in the defense of Jhansi and Gwalior.

Q 95. Ans. C

Explanation:

- James Thomason: During his tenure as the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces (1843–1853), James Thomason pioneered a comprehensive and practical system of vernacular education. Unlike the Anglicists who focused on higher education in English for a select few, Thomason realised the necessity of educating the rural masses. He introduced a network of village schools where instruction was imparted in the local vernacular languages. The curriculum was highly practical, focusing on subjects like mensuration (measurement of land) and agriculture, which were directly useful to the local agrarian population. This system was largely supported by a small local tax or cess.

Q 96. Ans. C

Explanation:

- Sambad Kaumudi (1821): This was a pioneering Bengali weekly newspaper started by the great social reformer Raja Rammohan Roy. It was primarily used as a platform to campaign against social evils like Sati and to promote progressive reforms.
- Bombay Samachar (1822): Founded by Fardunjee Marzban, this Gujarati newspaper is incredibly significant because it holds the distinction of being the oldest continuously published newspaper in India (still in print today).
- Rast Goftar (1851): Meaning “The Truth Teller,” this Anglo-Gujarati paper was started in Bombay by Dadabhai Naoroji. It was established primarily to clarify Zoroastrian concepts and promote social reform among the Parsis.
- Somaprakash (1858): This influential Bengali weekly was initiated by Ishwar Chandra Vidyasagar and edited by Dwarkanath Vidyabhusan. It was known for its fearless journalism and strongly supported the indigo farmers during the Indigo Revolt (1859–60).

Q 97. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Ganges Canal declared open (Belongs to Dalhousie): Although the construction of the Ganges Canal began earlier, the main canal was officially inaugurated and opened by Lord Dalhousie in 1854.
- Widow Remarriage Act (Belongs to Dalhousie's era): While the Hindu Widows' Remarriage Act was formally passed into law by his successor, Lord Canning, in July 1856, the act was drafted and introduced into the legislative council by Lord Dalhousie before he left India. It is historically considered one of the major social reforms of his administration.
- Opening of the first railway line (Belongs to Dalhousie): The first passenger train ran between Bombay (Bori Bunder) and Thane in April 1853 during Dalhousie's tenure, earning him the title of the “Father of Indian Railways.”
- Annexation of Mysore (Does NOT belong to Dalhousie): Lord Dalhousie did not annex Mysore. The administration of Mysore was taken over much earlier, in 1831, by Lord William Bentinck on the charges of severe misgovernance by the ruler, Krishnaraja Wadiyar III. (Note: It was not a complete annexation of the territory, and the administration was eventually restored to the royal family in 1881 by Lord Ripon).

Q 98. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Lord Amherst: Lord Amherst served as the Governor-General of India from 1823 to 1828. His tenure is primarily remembered for two major military campaigns:
  - ✓ The First Anglo-Burmese War (1824–1826): This war was triggered by the expansionist policies of the Burmese Empire, which threatened the British borders in Bengal. After two years of difficult fighting, the war concluded with the Treaty of Yandabo (1826), forcing the Burmese to cede Assam, Arakan, and Tenasserim to the British.
  - ✓ The Capture of Bharatpur (1826): Bharatpur had previously withstood British assaults (notably by Lord Lake in 1805) and was considered an impregnable fortress. However, during Amherst's tenure, a succession dispute led the British to intervene, and a force under Lord Combermere successfully breached and captured the fortress.

Q 99. Ans. B

Explanation:

- The Ostend Company (officially the General Company of the Indies) was chartered in December 1722 by Charles VI, the Holy Roman Emperor and ruler of the Austrian Habsburg domains.
- Following the War of the Spanish Succession, the Southern Netherlands (modern-day Belgium) passed from Spanish to Austrian control. The merchants in the port city of Ostend were eager to break the monopoly of the established British and Dutch East India Companies and capitalise on the highly lucrative tea and spice trade with India and China.

Q 100. Ans. C

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The Second Anglo-Burmese War was fought in 1852, which falls squarely within the tenure of Lord Dalhousie, who served as the Governor-General of India from 1848 to 1856. Dalhousie was known for his expansionist policies, and this war was a prime example of his aggressive imperialist approach.

- Statement 2 is incorrect: The immediate cause of the war had nothing to do with British missionaries. The conflict actually stemmed from commercial disputes. British timber merchants trading in Rangoon complained of extortion and ill-treatment by the local Burmese governor. In response, Lord Dalhousie sent Commodore Lambert to Rangoon to negotiate. Lambert's aggressive and tactless handling of the situation (including seizing a royal Burmese ship) rapidly escalated the tensions into a full-blown war.
- Statement 3 is correct: Following a relatively brief and decisive military campaign where British forces captured Martaban, Rangoon, and Prome, the war concluded with the British annexation of the rich coastal province of Pegu (Lower Burma) in 1852. This was a strategic victory for the British, as it gave them complete control over the entire eastern coast of the Bay of Bengal.

Q 101. Ans. B

Explanation:

- The first Famine Commission of British India was appointed in 1880 following the devastating famines of the late nineteenth century. It was headed by Sir Richard Strachey.
- The Commission recommended:
  - ✓ Formulation of a Famine Code
  - ✓ Development of relief works to provide employment during famines
  - ✓ Improvement in irrigation and transport facilities
  - ✓ Better administrative preparedness for famine conditions

These recommendations became the foundation of the British famine relief policy in India.

- Sir George Campbell was associated with Bengal administration.
- Sir Anthony MacDonnell headed a later Famine Commission in 1900.
- Sir John Woodhead was associated with the Woodhead Commission much later.

Q 102. Ans. C

Explanation:

- The Treaty of Gandamak (May 1879) was signed between the British government, represented by Sir Louis Cavagnari, and the Afghan Amir Yakub Khan, ending the first phase of the Second Anglo-Afghan War (1878–80). Initiated by Lord Lytton due to fears of growing Russian influence in Central Asia, the treaty gave the British control over strategic areas like Kurram, Pishin, Sibi, and key passes such as the Khyber and Michni. This formed the so-called "Scientific Frontier," a defensible north-western boundary advocated by Benjamin Disraeli.

Q 103. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is incorrect: The Pabna Agrarian Leagues were an agrarian movement, not a political or anti-colonial one. The peasants' anger was directed strictly against the oppressive zamindars (landlords) who were arbitrarily increasing rents, evicting tenants, and collecting illegal taxes (abwabs). The peasants did not demand independence; in fact, they frequently asserted their loyalty to the British Crown, famously declaring that they wanted to be the "ryots of Her Majesty the Queen and of Her only." They actively sought the legal protection of the British administration against the landlords.
- Statement 2 is correct: The movement received widespread support from the educated Bengali middle class and prominent nationalist intellectuals. Figures like Bankim Chandra Chatterjee (who wrote sympathetically about them in his journal Bangadarshan) and R.C. Dutt championed the peasants' cause. Furthermore, early nationalist organisations like the Indian Association (led by Surendranath Banerjee and Ananda Mohan Bose) organised campaigns in support of the tenants' rights, which ultimately contributed to the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885.

Q 104. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The Statutory Civil Service was introduced by Viceroy Lord Lytton in 1878–1879. Under this new system, one-sixth of the lucrative posts previously reserved strictly for the Covenanted Civil Service were to be filled by Indians. However, rather than by competitive examination, these appointments were made through nomination by local governments, specifically targeting Indians of "high families" or aristocratic social standing.
- Statement 2 is incorrect: The system was a complete failure and did not meet nationalist demands. Educated middle-class Indians and early nationalists strongly opposed this system because it bypassed merit in favor of aristocratic patronage. Their actual demand was for the holding of simultaneous civil service examinations in both India and England, along with an increase in the maximum age limit. Due to its unpopularity and ineffectiveness, the Statutory Civil Service was abolished just a few years later, following the recommendations of the Aitchison Commission (1886).

Q 105. Ans. D

Explanation:

- Treaty of Devgaon (1803): After being decisively defeated by Arthur Wellesley at the Battle of Argaon, the Bhonsle of Nagpur was forced to sign this treaty in December 1803. Under its terms, Bhonsle ceded the province of Cuttack (including Balasore) to the British, which strategically connected the British territories of Bengal and Madras.
- Treaty of Surji-Anjangaon (1803): Following heavy defeats at the battles of Assaye and Laswari, Daulat Rao Sindhia of Gwalior signed this treaty in December 1803. Sindhia ceded vast territories to the British, including the Ganges-Jumna Doab, the Delhi-Agra region, parts of Bundelkhand, and the Fort of Ahmednagar.
- Treaty of Rajpurghat (1805): Yashwantrao Holkar of Indore remained out of the initial conflict but later engaged the British in a prolonged and exhausting campaign. Eventually, a compromise was reached, and the Treaty of Rajpurghat was signed in December 1805. Holkar agreed to give up his claims on areas north of the Chambal River, including Tonk, Rampura, and Bundi.

Q 106. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The first commercial passenger train in India successfully ran between Bombay (Bori Bunder) and Thane on April 16, 1853. It covered a distance of about 34 kilometers and was operated by the Great Indian Peninsula Railway during the tenure of Lord Dalhousie.
- Statement 2 is incorrect: The early construction of railways in India was not funded by the British government exchequer, nor was it intended for cheap public welfare. Instead, it was funded by private British capital under the "Old Guarantee System." Under this system, the British Indian government guaranteed a minimum return of 5% on the investments made by private British railway companies. Furthermore, the primary motives for building the railways were colonial: to quickly transport raw materials (like cotton) from the hinterland to the ports for export to Britain, to distribute British manufactured goods into Indian markets, and to facilitate the rapid movement of the British army to suppress any internal rebellions.

Q 107. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is incorrect: While the Permanent Settlement was introduced during the tenure of Lord Cornwallis in 1793, the actual administrative recommendations, groundwork, and minute details were prepared by John Shore (the President of the Board of Revenue) and James Grant. The famous “Shore-Grant debate” shaped the policy. John Shore recommended recognising the Zamindars as proprietors but wanted the settlement to be for 10 years. Cornwallis simply took the final political decision to make Shore’s decennial settlement “permanent.”
- Statement 2 is correct: A fundamental feature of the Permanent Settlement was that it elevated the traditional tax-collecting Zamindars to the status of absolute proprietors (owners) of the land. They had the right to sell, mortgage, or transfer the land, provided they paid the fixed revenue to the British on time (enforced by strict rules like the “Sunset Law”).
- Statement 3 is correct: The financial arrangement was highly skewed in favor of the colonial state. Out of the total estimated rental revenue collected from the peasants, the state permanently fixed its share at a massive 10/11th (approx. 89%), leaving only 1/11th (approx. 11%) for the Zamindar as their remuneration for collecting it.
- Statement 4 is incorrect: The Permanent Settlement was disastrous for the cultivating peasants (ryots). The system deliberately ignored and destroyed their traditional, customary rights to the land they had farmed for generations. It reduced them to mere tenants-at-will, leaving them completely unprotected and at the mercy of the Zamindars, who could arbitrarily evict them or extort high rents.

Q 108. Ans. C

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The “Forward Policy” marked a decisive shift from the earlier British policy of non-intervention (or “masterly inactivity” as it was later called under John Lawrence). It was most aggressively initiated and championed in its early phase by Governor-General Lord Auckland (1836–1842). He believed that the British could no longer passively wait for threats to arrive at their borders and instead needed to intervene proactively in the affairs of neighboring states.

- Statement 2 is correct: The primary geopolitical driver behind the Forward Policy was the “Great Game”—the intense rivalry between the British and Russian Empires in Central Asia. The British were deeply paranoid that expanding Russian influence in Persia and Central Asia would eventually lead to a Russian invasion of India through the North-West frontier. The Forward Policy aimed to secure this frontier by establishing a friendly, pliant buffer state in Afghanistan.
- Statement 3 is correct: Driven by this paranoia and the Forward Policy, Lord Auckland decided to replace the independent-minded Afghan ruler, Dost Mohammad, with a pro-British puppet, Shah Shuja. This direct, aggressive intervention triggered the First Anglo-Afghan War (1839–1842). The war ended in an absolute disaster for the British, culminating in the infamous 1842 retreat from Kabul, where an entire British army of around 4,500 soldiers and 12,000 camp followers was annihilated by Afghan tribesmen.

Q 109. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Lord William Bentinck was the Governor of Madras in 1806. The mutiny was sparked by new military regulations (like wearing a new round hat and prohibiting caste marks). Following the bloody suppression of the mutiny, the Court of Directors held Bentinck responsible and recalled him (though he returned decades later as Governor-General of India).
- The Vellore Mutiny was triggered by new, deeply insensitive military regulations introduced by the Commander-in-Chief of the Madras Army, Sir John Cradock, with Bentinck’s approval. These regulations forbade Indian sepoys from wearing caste marks or earrings when in uniform, required them to trim their moustaches and shave their beards, and mandated the wearing of a new round hat/turban containing a leather cockade (made of animal skin, making it highly offensive to both Hindu and Muslim soldiers).

Q 110. Ans. D

Explanation:

- Assertion (A) is false: The First Anglo-Maratha War (1775–1782) did not result in a decisive defeat for the Marathas. In fact, it was essentially a stalemate.

The Maratha forces, utilising brilliant scorched-earth tactics, even inflicted a humiliating defeat on the British at the Battle of Wadgaon in 1779, forcing them to sign the dictated Convention of Wadgaon. The war eventually concluded with the Treaty of Salbai (1782), which largely restored the status quo ante bellum (the state of affairs before the war). The British recognised Madhavrao II as the rightful Peshwa and had to return most of the conquered territories, securing peace with the Marathas for the next 20 years.

- Reason (R) is true: As a general historical fact, the core strength of the British East India Company's army lay in its highly disciplined, European-trained infantry and vastly superior field artillery. In contrast, the traditional Maratha military machine was still heavily reliant on fast-moving light cavalry and guerrilla tactics (though leaders like Mahadji Sindhia were actively beginning to modernise their forces with European-style infantry and artillery during this period).

Q 111. Ans. B

Explanation:

- The Battle of Colachel was fought in August 1741 between the forces of the Kingdom of Travancore, led by the visionary King Marthanda Varma, and the forces of the Dutch East India Company (VOC), commanded by Admiral Eustachius De Lannoy.
- The Dutch were attempting to establish a political and trade monopoly over the lucrative spice (pepper) trade on the Malabar Coast. Marthanda Varma's expansionist policies in the region threatened this monopoly, leading the Dutch to launch a naval expedition to subdue Travancore.

Q 112. Ans. D

Explanation:

- Balshastri Jambhekar founded the Marathi newspaper Darpan in 1832. It is regarded as one of the earliest Marathi newspapers and played an important role in spreading modern education, rationalism, scientific outlook, and social awareness in Western India. Because of his pioneering contribution to Marathi journalism, Jambhekar is often called the "Father of Marathi Journalism."

Q 113. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The First Indian Factory Act was enacted in 1881 during the tenure of the liberal Viceroy, Lord Ripon (1880–1884), who is well-known for his progressive administrative reforms in India.

- Statement 2 is incorrect: The Act was entirely inadequate regarding adult workers; it did not regulate the working hours or conditions for either adult men or women. Instead, it was primarily a piece of child labor legislation. It applied only to factories employing 100 or more workers and using mechanical power. Its main provisions were limited to:

- ✓ Prohibiting the employment of children under the age of 7.
- ✓ Limiting the working hours of children between the ages of 7 and 12 to a maximum of 9 hours per day.
- ✓ Mandating four holidays per month for children.
- ✓ Requiring the fencing of dangerous machinery to prevent accidents.

Q 114. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Assertion (A) is true: During the Revolt of 1857, the newly emerging Western-educated Indian middle class (the intelligentsia) explicitly did not support the uprising. They remained completely aloof and, in many instances, actively supported the British administration or prayed for their victory.
- Reason (R) is true and explains (A): At this early stage in the 19th century, the educated intelligentsia had immense faith in the British system. They believed that British colonial rule was a necessary, progressive force that would eventually help India overcome its backwardness by introducing modern science, Western education, social reforms, and industrialisation.

Q 115. Ans. C

Explanation:

- The Charter Act of 1833 directed the Company to take steps to mitigate slavery, it was finally abolished legally throughout British India in 1843 by Act V during the Governor-Generalship of Lord Ellenborough.
- Lord Ellenborough served as the Governor-General of India from 1842 to 1844. During his brief tenure, he enacted the Indian Slavery Act of 1843 (Act V of 1843). This legislation legally abolished slavery across British India, effectively decreeing that no individual could be sold as a slave and that anyone keeping slaves would be prosecuted. His administration is also historically notable for the controversial annexation of Sindh by Sir Charles Napier in 1843.

Q 116. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The Radha Swami (or Radha Soami) movement was founded in Agra in 1861 by a banker named Tulsi Ram, who was affectionately known as Shiv Dayal Saheb (or Swamiji Maharaj).
- Statement 2 is incorrect: The Radha Swami movement does not believe in orthodox Hindu practices. In fact, they strictly reject idol worship, elaborate rituals, and the belief that salvation requires pilgrimages or traditional temple worship. Instead, the sect emphasises a simple life, congregational prayer (satsang), and the absolute necessity of a living spiritual master (Guru) to guide followers on an inward spiritual journey to unite the soul (Radha) with the supreme creator (Swami).

Q 117. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The primary cause of the First Anglo-Burmese War (1824–1826) was the aggressive westward expansion of the Burmese Empire (under the Konbaung dynasty). By the early 1820s, the Burmese had conquered Arakan, Manipur, and Assam, bringing their frontiers directly right up against the borders of the British East India Company's territories in Bengal. The immediate trigger was border clashes in the Cachar and Sylhet regions, and a dispute over the control of Shahpuri Island near Chittagong.
- Statement 2 is incorrect: The war was neither quick nor bloodless. In fact, it was the longest, most expensive, and one of the deadliest wars fought by the British in Indian history up to that point. The British East India Company forces suffered tremendous casualties—roughly 15,000 out of 40,000 troops died. However, the vast majority of these deaths were not from direct combat with the Burmese army, but rather from severe tropical diseases (like malaria and dysentery), the harsh jungle terrain, and incredibly poor logistical planning by the British command.

Q 118. Ans. B

Explanation:

- The Anglo-Marathi periodical Indu Prakash was formally started by Vishnu Parshuram Pandit in 1862, Mahadev Govind Ranade was its chief intellectual force. He edited the English columns of the newspaper and used it as a powerful platform to advocate for progressive social and political reforms. Because of his profound influence on the publication, he is frequently credited alongside its foundational figures in historical texts.

Q 119. Ans. D

Explanation:

- Establishment of the Atmiya Sabha (1815): Raja Rammohan Roy settled in Calcutta in 1814 and soon founded the Atmiya Sabha (Society of Friends) in 1815. This was his first major organisational effort to propagate the monotheistic ideals of the Vedanta and to campaign against idol worship, caste rigidities, and meaningless social rituals.
- Publication of Mirat-ul-Akhbar (1822): Continuing his efforts to educate the public and champion free speech, Roy launched Mirat-ul-Akhbar ("Mirror of News"). It holds the historical distinction of being the first Persian-language journal published in India.
- Foundation of the Brahmo Sabha (1828): To formally institutionalise his religious and social reform ideas, Roy founded the Brahmo Sabha in August 1828. This organisation, which was later renamed the Brahmo Samaj, became one of the most influential socio-religious reform movements in modern Indian history.
- Abolition of Sati (1829): After years of relentless campaigning, writing, and lobbying by Raja Rammohan Roy and his supporters against the practice of widow burning, the British colonial government finally acted. Governor-General Lord William Bentinck passed the Bengal Sati Regulation in December 1829, formally declaring the practice illegal and punishable by criminal courts.

Q 120. Ans. C

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The Amirs of Sindh had indeed been forced into signing a Subsidiary Treaty in 1839 by Governor-General Lord Auckland. This treaty violated previous agreements (like the Treaty of Eternal Friendship of 1809) by forcing the Amirs to pay for the stationing of a British subsidiary force in their territory and effectively giving the British control over their foreign policy.
- Statement 2 is correct: The annexation of Sindh in 1843 is widely regarded by historians as a cynical, aggressive move designed to restore British prestige after their absolute humiliation and catastrophic defeat in the First Anglo-Afghan War (1839–1842). Governor-General Lord Ellenborough wanted a decisive victory to project strength, and the relatively weak Amirs of Sindh provided a convenient target.

- Statement 3 is incorrect: It was not James Outram who led the final assault. While Major James Outram was the British Resident in Sindh who handled the increasingly hostile negotiations (and whose residency was attacked by angry Balochs, sparking the final conflict), the British military forces were commanded by Sir Charles Napier. It was Napier who decisively crushed the forces of the Amirs at the Battle of Miani (and later the Battle of Dubba) in 1843.

Q 121. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The primary reasons for the failure of the revolt was its highly localised and fragmented nature. The uprising was largely confined to Northern and Central India (regions like Awadh, Rohilkhand, Delhi, and parts of Bihar). Furthermore, there was no centralised planning, no unified military strategy, and no universally accepted leader capable of uniting the various factions. The nominal leader, the aging Mughal Emperor Bahadur Shah Zafar, was reluctant and weak. Other leaders like Nana Sahib, Rani Lakshmibai, and Kunwar Singh were undeniably brave, but they were primarily fighting to reclaim their own lost territories and privileges rather than coordinating a pan-Indian nationalist war.
- Statement 2 is correct: The newly emerging Western-educated Indian middle class (the intelligentsia) explicitly did not support the uprising. They viewed the rebellion as a reactionary movement led by orthodox religious figures and dispossessed feudal landlords aiming to restore an outdated medieval order. They mistakenly believed that continued British rule was necessary to modernise India and rid it of backward social customs.
- Statement 3 is incorrect: The Gurkhas and the Sikhs did not ally with the mutineers; they were instrumental in helping the British crush the revolt. The Sikh princes of Punjab (such as those from Patiala, Nabha, and Jind) and the Gurkha regiments sent by the Prime Minister of Nepal (Jang Bahadur Rana) remained fiercely loyal to the British. Their military support provided the crucial manpower needed by the British East India Company to recapture key rebel strongholds like Delhi and Lucknow.

Q 122. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Assertion (A) is true: When Lord Cornwallis became Governor-General (1786–1793), he implemented a strict policy of Europeanisation across the administrative machinery. He reserved all the high-ranking, highly paid positions in the civil service, judiciary, and military exclusively for Europeans (specifically Englishmen). Indians were systematically demoted or restricted to subordinate, low-paying clerical roles (like Munsifs or Sadar Amins). This laid the foundation for what would later become the Covenanted Civil Service.
- Reason (R) is true and explains (A): The driving force behind this systematic exclusion was Cornwallis's deep-seated racial prejudice and distrust of Indians. He famously held the view that "Every native of Hindustan is corrupt." He believed that Indians lacked the necessary moral character, integrity, and loyalty to British administrative standards to hold positions of high authority. Therefore, to eradicate the rampant corruption that had plagued the East India Company's administration under earlier officials, he relied entirely on European officials, simultaneously raising their salaries significantly to disincentivise private trading and bribery.

Q 123. Ans. D

Explanation:

- As the Governor of Bengal (and later the first Governor-General), Warren Hastings was the principal architect of the early British judicial system in India. Through his famous Judicial Plan of 1772, he established a hierarchy of courts to replace the chaotic dual system of government left behind by Robert Clive.
- At the district level, he created the Mofussil Diwani Adalat (Civil Court) and the Mofussil Faujdari Adalat (Criminal Court).
- To hear appeals from these district courts, he established the Sadar Diwani Adalat (the highest civil appellate court, presided over by the Governor and his Council) and the Sadar Nizamat Adalat (the highest criminal appellate court, initially presided over by an Indian Naib Nazim under the supervision of the Governor) at Calcutta.

Q 124. Ans. D

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: In 1786, the British Government wanted Lord Cornwallis—a highly respected aristocrat and military commander—to take up the post of Governor-General of Bengal. Cornwallis, however, initially refused the offer unless certain conditions were met. To persuade him to accept the role, the British Parliament specifically drafted and enacted the Act of 1786.
- Statement 2 is correct: The Act of 1786 was passed to explicitly grant the two specific powers Cornwallis demanded as his conditions for accepting the job:
  - ✓ Override Power: He demanded the ultimate authority to override the majority decision of his Executive Council in special or extraordinary cases. (He insisted on this because he saw how his predecessor, Warren Hastings, was frequently paralysed and outvoted by a hostile council).
  - ✓ Commander-in-Chief: He demanded that the civilian office of Governor-General and the supreme military office of Commander-in-Chief be united in his person.

Q 125. Ans. C

Explanation:

- During the Revolt of 1857, the Prime Minister of Britain was Henry John Temple, 3rd Viscount Palmerston, commonly known as Lord Palmerston. He served as the British Prime Minister from 1855 to 1858 and handled the crisis caused by the uprising in India.
- Benjamin Disraeli became Prime Minister later.
- William Ewart Gladstone also served later in the 19th century.
- Winston Churchill belonged to the 20th century.

Q 126. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The Battle of Porto Novo (fought in July 1781) was indeed a major, turning-point engagement of the Second Anglo-Mysore War (1780–1784). Prior to this battle, the British had suffered humiliating defeats (such as the Battle of Pollilur in 1780), and their position in the Carnatic region was highly precarious.
- Statement 2 is incorrect: The British forces under Sir Eyre Coote decisively defeated the Mysore army commanded by Hyder Ali, not his son Tipu

Sultan (though Tipu was an active commander elsewhere during the war). Furthermore, neither leader died at this battle. Hyder Ali managed to retreat and continued fighting until he died from a cancerous tumor in December 1782, while Tipu Sultan famously died much later fighting the British at Srirangapatna during the Fourth Anglo-Mysore War in 1799.

Q 127. Ans. C

Explanation:

- Dadabhai Naoroji founded the Gyan Prasarak Mandali (Society for the Promotion of Knowledge) in Bombay in 1848. The organisation was established with the objective of spreading modern education and intellectual awareness among adult Gujaratis and Parsis, especially those who did not have access to formal schooling.

Other information

- Mahadev Govind Ranade was associated with social reform movements and the Prarthana Samaj.
- Balshastris Jambhekar is known as the “Father of Marathi Journalism.”
- Gopal Hari Deshmukh was a noted social reformer from Maharashtra.

Q 128. Ans. C

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The Gadkaris were a traditional, hereditary military class of infantrymen whose primary duty was to garrison and defend the numerous Maratha forts, particularly within the Kolhapur region. In exchange for their continued military service, they were historically granted revenue-free lands (inams) by the Maratha rulers to sustain themselves and their families.
- Statement 2 is correct: The main cause of the 1844 rebellion was direct British administrative and economic interference. When the British effectively took control of the administration in Kolhapur (appointing a minister named Daji Krishna Pandit to manage the state's finances), they sought to maximise revenue to pay off the state's debts and the tribute owed to the colonial government. To achieve this, the administration disbanded the Gadkari garrisons and began confiscating or heavily taxing their traditional revenue-free lands.

Q 129. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is incorrect: The Tinkathia system had absolutely nothing to do with European planters growing food crops, nor was it designed to alleviate famines. In fact, it actively worsened local food security because it forced Indian peasants to dedicate their most fertile land to a non-edible cash crop (indigo) instead of essential food grains like rice or wheat.

- Statement 2 is correct: Under the deeply exploitative Tinkathia system, European planters forced local Indian peasants (ryots) through coercive contracts to cultivate indigo on 3/20th of their total landholdings. The term itself is derived from the local land measurement system: peasants were mandated to plant indigo on 3 kathas out of every bigha (which consists of 20 kathas) of their land.

Q 130. Ans. B

Explanation:

- The Waghara Uprising (1818–19) was an armed revolt led by the Waghara chiefs and local people against the oppressive revenue demands and interference of the Gaekwad of Baroda, who was backed by the British authorities. The rebellion mainly occurred in the Okha Mandal region of Saurashtra (present-day Gujarat).
- The Waghara strongly resisted British-supported control over their territory and opposed the growing political and economic domination in the region. Though the uprising was eventually suppressed by combined British and Gaekwad forces, it reflected the early resistance movements against colonial expansion and allied princely states in western India.
- OTHER INFORMATION
  - ✓ The Malabar Coast was associated with movements like the Moplah uprisings.
  - ✓ The Chhotanagpur Plateau witnessed several tribal revolts such as the Kol uprising.
  - ✓ The Western Ghats were linked with other regional peasant and tribal resistances.

Q 131. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: After the First Anglo-Sikh War, the Treaty of Bhairawal (1846) placed Punjab under a Council of Regency acting on behalf of the minor Maharaja Duleep Singh. The council functioned under the strict control of a British Resident, making the British the real authority in Punjab. Henry Lawrence was appointed as the first Resident.

- Statement 2 is correct: After Punjab was formally annexed in 1849, it was initially governed by a three-member “Board of Administration” (which included both Henry and John Lawrence). In 1853, Lord Dalhousie abolished this board and entrusted the supreme administrative authority of the province to a single executive. John Lawrence was appointed as the first Chief Commissioner of Punjab, where he earned a formidable reputation for his efficient administrative reforms.
- Statement 3 is incorrect: Punjab was annexed in 1849 by Governor-General Lord Dalhousie, not Sir George Barlow. Lord Dalhousie aggressively pursued expansionist policies and annexed Punjab following the decisive British victories at the battles of Chillianwala and Gujarat during the Second Anglo-Sikh War. Sir George Barlow had served as acting Governor-General much earlier (1805–1807) and was known for his policy of non-intervention.

Q 132. Ans. D

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: Sir Charles Metcalfe, who served as the Acting Governor-General of India (1835–1836) after Lord William Bentinck, is historically celebrated as the “Liberator of the Indian Press.” He earned this title precisely because he championed and passed the Press Act of 1835, which removed the severe restrictions on publishing and allowed the press in India to function with a high degree of freedom.
- Statement 2 is correct: The primary function of the 1835 Act was to completely repeal the infamous Licensing Regulations of 1823. Those draconian 1823 regulations had been enacted by the Acting Governor-General John Adams. Under Adams’s rules, starting or using a press without a government license was a criminal offense, a policy that famously forced Raja Rammohan Roy to shut down his pioneering Persian journal, Mirat-ul-Akhbar. Metcalfe’s new 1835 law simply required a printer or publisher to give a precise account of the premises of a publication, effectively restoring press freedom.

Q 133. Ans. B

Explanation:

- During the Revolt of 1857, Pir Ali, along with his associates, played a key role in mobilising the masses against British rule.
- William Tayler, a British official representing the East India Company, was tasked with suppressing the rebellion led by Pir Ali.

- Another prominent figure from Bihar was Kunwar Singh, who emerged as a leading commander of the uprising in the region.

Q 134. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: Benjamin Disraeli, a prominent Conservative leader and future Prime Minister of Britain, famously rejected the British government's official narrative that the uprising was merely a military mutiny. In a speech to the House of Commons in July 1857, he described it as a "National Revolt" rooted in deep-seated grievances against the British empire's social, political, and economic interference in India.
- Statement 2 is incorrect: Karl Marx did not dismiss the event entirely as a reactionary feudal uprising. Writing for the New York Tribune during the events of 1857, Marx closely followed the rebellion and actually agreed with Disraeli's assessment. Marx characterised the uprising as a national revolt and a broader anti-colonial struggle against British exploitation, noting that what the British dismissed as a mere military mutiny was in fact a profound national awakening.
- Statement 3 is correct: The prominent Indian historian Dr. R.C. Majumdar offered a highly critical analysis of the 1857 uprising. Because the revolt was highly localised (largely confined to the North), lacked a unifying nationalist ideology, and saw many Indian groups actively fighting for the British, Majumdar famously concluded in his book that the event was "neither first, nor national, nor a war of independence."

Q 135. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Karam Shah (Pagal Panthis - Bengal): Karam Shah was the founder of the Pagal Panthi sect, a semi-religious and egalitarian group consisting mainly of the Hajong and Garo tribes in the Mymensingh district of Bengal. Under his son, Tipu, the sect rose in rebellion in 1825 against the oppressive exactions of the local zamindars and the British administration.
- Tomma Sora (Koya Rebellion - Godavari/Andhra): Tomma Sora was a key leader of the Koya rebellion that broke out in the eastern Godavari tract in 1879–1880. The Koyas rose against the oppressive police regulations, the denial of their customary rights over forest areas, and the exploitation by moneylenders (muttadars).

- Buddho Bhagat (Kol Mutiny - Chhotanagpur): Buddho Bhagat was a prominent tribal leader who spearheaded the massive Kol Mutiny in 1831. The Kols of Chhotanagpur (which included Ranchi, Singhbhum, Hazaribagh, Palamau, and western parts of Manbhum) rebelled against the massive transfer of their lands to outsider Sikh and Muslim farmers and the heavy taxation imposed by the British.
- Veerapandiya Kattabomman (Poligar Rebellions - Tirunelveli/Madras): Veerapandiya Kattabomman was a legendary Palayakarrar (Poligar) chief from Panchalankurichi in the Tirunelveli region. He fiercely resisted the sovereignty and tax-collection demands of the British East India Company, leading to the severe Poligar Wars at the end of the 18th century before he was captured and hanged in 1799.

Q 136. Ans. B

Explanation:

- The Tripartite Treaty of 1838 was signed between:
  - ✓ the British East India Company
  - ✓ Shah Shuja (the exiled former ruler of Afghanistan)
  - ✓ Maharaja Ranjit Singh
- The treaty was designed to remove Dost Mohammad Khan from power in Afghanistan and restore Shah Shuja to the Afghan throne. The British feared growing Russian influence in Central Asia and wanted Afghanistan to act as a buffer state during the period known as the "Great Game."
- Under the agreement:
  - ✓ Ranjit Singh agreed to support Shah Shuja
  - ✓ the British promised military assistance
  - ✓ and Shah Shuja accepted certain political conditions favorable to the British.
- This treaty directly paved the way for the First Anglo-Afghan War (1839–42), which eventually turned into a major disaster for the British, especially after the catastrophic retreat from Kabul in 1842.

Q 137. Ans. C

Explanation:

- The famous 'Dastak' was a free pass or permit that allowed the English East India Company to trade goods without paying local customs or transit duties in Bengal. This privilege was granted by the Mughal Emperor Farrukhsiyar through the imperial farman of 1717.

- Under this farman:
  - ✓ The Company received duty-free trade privileges in Bengal for its own goods
  - ✓ It could rent additional territories around Calcutta
  - ✓ Its officials gained extensive commercial advantages.

Q 138. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The Third Battle of Panipat, fought on January 14, 1761, was a massive conflict between the Maratha Empire and the invading Afghan army. The Maratha expeditionary forces were commanded by Sadashivrao Bhau (cousin of the Peshwa, Balaji Baji Rao), while the Afghan coalition was led by the Durrani Emperor, Ahmad Shah Abdali.
- Statement 2 is incorrect: The most critical factors leading to the devastating Maratha defeat was their sheer isolation in North India. They did not receive crucial support from the Rajputs, Jats, or Sikhs. The Marathas' previous policies of aggressive expansion, heavy taxation (Chauth and Sardeshmukhi), and interference in regional successions had alienated these local powers. For example, the prominent Jat ruler Suraj Mal initially joined the Maratha camp but withdrew his forces before the battle due to sharp strategic disagreements with Sadashivrao Bhau.

Q 139. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Lord Mayo was the only British Viceroy to be assassinated while in office in India. He was killed on 8 February 1872 at the Andaman Islands by a convict named Sher Ali Afridi during an official visit to inspect the penal settlement at Port Blair.
- Sher Ali Afridi, a Pathan prisoner serving a life sentence, attacked Lord Mayo with a knife as the Viceroy was returning from Mount Harriet to the jetty. Lord Mayo died shortly after the attack.
- During his tenure (1869–72), Lord Mayo introduced several important administrative and financial reforms, including:
  - ✓ the beginning of financial decentralisation
  - ✓ encouragement of local self-government
  - ✓ the establishment of the Mayo College at Ajmer for the education of Indian princes.

Q 140. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The French East India Company (Compagnie des Indes Orientales) was indeed established in 1664. It was the brainchild of Jean-Baptiste Colbert, the powerful finance minister to King Louis XIV. Unlike the British East India Company, which was a private enterprise, the French company was heavily backed and controlled by the French government.
- Statement 2 is correct: In 1673, Francois Martin (along with Bellanger de Lespina) obtained a village from the local Muslim governor, Sher Khan Lodi. This settlement was developed into Pondicherry in 1674. Francois Martin served as its first governor and transformed it into the most important, fortified, and prosperous French settlement in India, serving as their administrative headquarters.
- Statement 3 is incorrect: The French did not retain a “vast territorial empire.” Their political and military ambitions to build an empire in India were decisively crushed by the British during the Carnatic Wars, culminating in their severe defeat at the Battle of Wandiwash in 1760. Under the subsequent Treaty of Paris (1763), the French were allowed to keep a few isolated coastal enclaves (Pondicherry, Chandernagore, Mahe, Karikal, and Yanam) strictly for commercial purposes, but they were permanently forbidden from fortifying them or maintaining standing armies.

Q 141. Ans. A

Explanation:

- James Outram (Awadh): Major General James Outram was appointed as the British Resident in Awadh (Oudh) in 1854. He submitted a highly critical report detailing the severe maladministration and corruption under Nawab Wajid Ali Shah. Governor-General Lord Dalhousie used Outram's report as the primary justification to formally annex Awadh in 1856 on the grounds of “misgovernance.”
- Charles Napier (Sindh): Major General Sir Charles Napier was the British military commander dispatched to deal with the Amirs of Sindh. He aggressively provoked a conflict and decisively crushed their forces at the Battle of Miani, leading to the outright annexation of Sindh in 1843.
- Henry Lawrence (Punjab): After the First Anglo-Sikh War, the Treaty of Bhairawal (1846) placed Punjab under increased British control. Sir Henry Lawrence was appointed as the first British Resident at Lahore and exercised real authority over the administration by supervising the Sikh Council of Regency on behalf of the minor ruler, Maharaja Duleep Singh, until Punjab was formally annexed by the British in 1849.

- Barry Close: Following the fall of Seringapatam and the death of Tipu Sultan in 1799, Colonel Barry Close was appointed the first Resident of Mysore. He played a vital role in overseeing the Subsidiary Alliance with the young Maharaja of the restored Wodeyar dynasty.

Q 142. Ans. B

Explanation:

- The Rohilla War (1774) was fought during the tenure of Warren Hastings. In this conflict, the British East India Company provided military support to Shuja-ud-Daula against the Rohillas of Rohilkhand.
- The Nawab of Awadh wanted to annex Rohilkhand and accused the Rohillas of failing to pay the promised money for earlier military assistance against the Marathas. Warren Hastings agreed to send Company troops in return for a large payment from Awadh.
- The British forces defeated the Rohillas, and Rohilkhand came under the control of Awadh.

Q 143. Ans. D

Explanation:

- The High Courts Act of 1861 abolished the old judicial system consisting of the Supreme Courts and the Sadar Diwani and Sadar Nizamat Adalats. In their place, the British government established new High Courts to create a more unified judicial structure in India.
- Accordingly, High Courts were established at:
  - ✓ Calcutta in 1862
  - ✓ Bombay in 1862
  - ✓ Madras in 1862.
- These courts exercised both civil and criminal jurisdiction and marked an important step in the development of the modern Indian judiciary.

Q 144. Ans. C

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The 'White Mutiny' (1859) was a protest by the European soldiers of the East India Company's army. After the Revolt of 1857, the Government of India Act, 1858 transferred the administration of India from the Company to the British Crown. The European troops objected to being automatically absorbed into the Crown's army without their consent and demanded fresh enlistment terms.

- Statement 2 is correct: The White Mutiny took place during the tenure of Lord Canning. He handled the situation carefully by disbanding some protesting regiments and granting concessions to avoid a larger crisis. Although the mutiny did not become as violent as the Revolt of 1857, it exposed discontent even among British troops in India.

Q 145. Ans. D

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is incorrect: It was not Lord Ellenborough who abolished the import duties on coarse cotton goods. This measure was taken during the viceroyalty of Lord Lytton in the late 1870s. The British government removed import duties on British cotton textiles entering India under pressure from textile manufacturers in Lancashire.
- Statement 2 is incorrect: The policy was not intended to protect the Indian textile industry. In fact, it harmed Indian textile mills in places like Bombay and Ahmedabad by exposing them to cheaper British machine-made goods. The measure mainly benefited British industrial interests, especially the Lancashire cotton industry.

Q 146. Ans. C

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The Indian Civil Service Act of 1861 reserved important higher administrative posts for the covenanted civil servants, who were mainly Europeans appointed through the British civil service system. This strengthened British control over the higher administration in India.
- Statement 2 is correct: Satyendranath Tagore successfully passed the Indian Civil Service (ICS) examination in 1863 and later joined the service in 1864. He became the first Indian to enter the prestigious civil service dominated by the British.

Q 147. Ans. D

Explanation:

- Sir Syed Ahmad Khan was a pioneering Muslim pragmatist, social reformer, and philosopher of 19th-century India. In 1864, while posted as a civil servant in Ghazipur, he founded the Scientific Society. The primary objective of this society was to translate major Western works on science, arts, and literature into Indian languages (primarily Urdu) so that the Muslim community could access and accept modern Western education. When he was transferred to Aligarh, he shifted the society there in 1866.

Q 148. Ans. A

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The Nirankari movement was founded by Baba Dayal Das (1783–1855) in the early 19th century. It was one of the earliest socio-religious reform movements within Sikhism, emerging against the backdrop of what Dayal Das saw as the creeping influence of Hindu ritualism in Sikh practices during the reign of Maharaja Ranjit Singh.
- Statement 2 is correct: The word Nirankar translates to “Formless.” The core doctrine of the movement was the worship of God as a formless, omnipresent spirit. Baba Dayal Das vehemently opposed idol worship, the veneration of human gurus, and meaningless Brahmanical rituals. He urged Sikhs to return to the pure, original teachings of Guru Nanak, focusing on the chanting of the shabad (the divine word).
- Statement 3 is incorrect: The Nirankari movement remained strictly a peaceful, socio-religious reform movement. It never took on a political or militant character against the British state. The movement that did transform into a highly militant, anti-British political struggle (frequently compared to the Wahabi movement) was the Kuka (Namdhari) Movement, which was founded by Baba Balak Singh and later popularised by Baba Ram Singh.

Q 149. Ans. B

Explanation:

- Statement 1 is correct: The British East India Company possessed a highly organised system of military recruitment. They generally recruited their officers and soldiers based on reliability, skill, and strict military discipline, emphasising merit over heredity or personal connections.

- Statement 2 is correct: In sharp contrast to the British, many Indian rulers of the 18th century lacked a modern, merit-based system of military leadership. They frequently appointed military commanders and administrators based on caste, clan affiliations, and personal relations. Because leadership was often feudal or hereditary, it frequently ignored actual military merit and tactical capability.
- Statement 3 is incorrect: It is a historical fallacy to state that the British lacked experienced leadership. In fact, Brilliant Leadership was one of the primary reasons for their supremacy. The British possessed highly capable, experienced, and strategically brilliant leaders such as Robert Clive, Warren Hastings, Arthur Wellesley, and Sir Eyre Coote.

Q 150. Ans. D

Explanation:

- Narendranath Sen founded and edited the journal Indian Mirror, which initially served as a mouthpiece of the Brahmo Samaj movement. Over time, the newspaper became an influential nationalist publication.
- He later emerged as an important figure in the early Indian National Congress and used journalism to promote political awareness and reform in colonial India.
- He played a pivotal role in the Anti-Partition Movement (1905) in Bengal, using the Mirror to mobilise public opinion against Lord Curzon.

73rd BPSC Foundation Batch

Prelims + Mains + Interview

BATCH 9

हिंदी माध्यम

📍 Musallahpur

ONLINE & OFFLINE

STARTS FROM 9th APRIL 2026

📍 Boring Road

ONLINE & OFFLINE

STARTS FROM 21st APRIL 2026

BATCH 6

Bilingual

BATCH 1

English Medium

📍 Boring Road

ONLINE & OFFLINE

STARTS FROM 21st APRIL 2026

Patna

Musallahpur

KGS Campus,
Near Sai Mandir,
Musallahpur Hat,
Patna, Bihar-800006

Boring Road

2nd Floor, Kumar
Tower, Boring Road
Chauraha, Patna,
Bihar-800001

Naya Tola

KP Yadav
Compound Kazipur,
Naya Tola, Patna,
Bihar-800004